Crosses Get

House Kill

WASHINGTON 18 — A House subcommittee Thursday killed a bill providing for restoration of white wooden crosses over the graves in the National Memorial Cemetry in Honolulu.

The crosses were crected temporarily in 1949 in the new cemetry in Punch Bowl crater and removed last September by the Army in accordance with a decision to use flat stone markers.

Fun for all was yesterday As the journalism class enacted a play.

"The Persecuted Maiden" it was called, Though unlike its title, no one bawled.

Nor was it in the least bit bad, Just full of fun and humor for you. The class enjoyed doing it, too.

the flat stone markers.

Delegate Farrington (R.-Hawaii) told the Public Lands subcominities that the people of Hawaii had become so impressed by the row on row of white crosses over, the 13,800 graves that their removal came as a severe emotional shock.

The people of the territory were virtually unanimous in asking for restoration of the crosses, he said.

All it would cost, Farrington said is $2.39 for each grave.

The class enjoyed doing it, too.

Also the Student Body Meeting was held that day was held that day with temporary plans for a school picnic in May.

This plus announcements about numerous things.

As the Magazine Sale, Prom, and Junior Class rings Prought to a close was the business of the day.

Only to follow by the unexpected play.

So far this year, KU can be proud of their sportsmanship.
