The desendants are accused of conspiring to restrain and monopolitic championship boxing bouts. The clubs, of which Norris is president, are the chief promoters of professional championship boxing matches in the country.

Williams said they promoted or participated in the presentation of about 90 per cent of all championship contests, since 1949.

Through this means, the charges said, the IBC had excluded others from the promotion of such lights, and controlled the sale of radio, television and motion picture rights at the contests.

The defendants also were accused of obtaining exclusive use of all principal arenas in New York, Chicago and other large cities suitable for staging championship bouts.

Through the conspiracy, the charges said, the defendants had succeeded in 1949 in eliminating the Tournament of Champions, Inc., the leading competing promoter of championship matches.
