Junior Members Of Oregon Supreme Court Carry Load

SALEM (AP) — The three newest members of the Oregon Supreme Court are writing two-thirds of the court's opinions, even though they weren't appointed to the bench until 1950.

The trio—Justices Walter L. Toose, Earl C. Latourette and Harold J. Warner—have written 70 of the 105 opinions that the court has handed down since it returned from summer vacation last September.

Justice Toose, a circuit court judge in Portland until he was appointed to the supreme court only 16 months ago, is the freshman member of the court. But he leads all the rest with the 31 opinions he has turned out since September.

In second place is Justice Latourette, who was a circuit judge in Oregon City and who was appointed to the supreme court 26 months ago. He has written 21 opinions.

Justice Arthur D. Hay, who has been on the high bench since 1942, has written 12, compared with nine for Justice Hall S. Lusk, who was appointed 15 years ago.

At the bottom of the list, with seven opinions each, are Chief Justice James T. Brand and Justice George Rossman. Brand has been a Justice for 11 years, while Rossman is dean of the court with 25 years of service.
