Chick Chats On Layers

The loafing hen is a drain on the poultryman's purse, and if she can not be brought back into production, she should be removed from the flock.

Most poultrymen are hard put to find the real reason why some hens suddenly quit laying as winter draws on. Often the hen's ancestry gets the blame, and indeed, heredity is all-important in determining how great an egg harvest the poultry producer will reap. There are plenty of hens, however, that fall off in production before their time, birds that would be able to continue laying if they were cared for properly.

A REST PERIOD

Such instances are not uncommon in the winter laying house where hens, after long months of laying, go out of production as if they rest up after working over hard. Frequently these birds will resume laying if they are given the right kind of care.

When the poultryman sets out to regain good production, one of the first things he should do is to look for conditions within the laying house which may be causing discomfort among the layers. The house should be well ventilated without drafts, light enough to afford protection against weather, and sufficiently warm. Chills, dampness or drafts frequently are responsible for laying slumps.

NUTRITIONAL NEEDS

One of the commonest causes of reduced production is the lack of certain food nutrients. Make sure the loafing birds get plenty of reduced production is the lack of grains which are high in fat content, such as corn. Perhaps the birds need more variation in their diet. Many poultrymen find that warm crumbly, moist mash is especially helpful for loafing layers, particularly during cold weather.

If the birds are badly out of condition, a conditioner consisting of stomachic drugs may be added to the regular mash. Many producers who have tried this report good results.

Hens which fail to respond after a reasonable length of time should be removed for they are not paying for their keep.

Protect pets from germ-ridden garbage by storing all household waste materials in covered galvanized steel garbage cans.

To season a salad bowl, rub it with hot olive oil and then with a cut clove of garlic. Repeat several times over a period of about three weeks.

Swimming Program Gets Underway Here This Month

The annual Klamath Falls Swimming Program gets underway late this month under the sponsorship of the city recreation department, the Klamath school districts, American Red Cross, Girl Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, 4-H and Boy Scouts.

Beginning Monday, March 24, a six-lesson lifesaving class is slated. It will run on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday for two weeks, with makeups set for Friday. Class time will run from 6:30 to 9 p.m. Fee for this class is $2.50.

Boys and girls swimming classes are limited to 40 persons in each class. Enrollment closes at that point. Boys classes start April 7, girls a day later. Eight lessons are to be given for $1.

Open swimming sessions have again been scheduled for Saturday afternoons, according to City Recreation Director Bob Bonney. A 5 1/2 year old's class may be inaugurated. A physically handicapped class is being scheduled for 11:15 a.m. Saturdays, with an advanced Girl Scout, 4-H and Camp Fire Girls swimming class set for 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesdays. The Paul Runville group will swim Thursdays from 7 to 9 p.m. and Boy Scouts Fridays from 7 to 9.

All swimming will be held in the KUMS natatorium. Registration fees and registration will be made at the Recreation Office, City Hall.
