This and That About Women
Edited by Ruth King

"It's A Woman's World"

VERSATILE—WHAT A LOT IT IMPLIES . . . how little it really tells . . . team it with a homemaker and it's the story of one of Klamath County's most capable women, Margaret Tallman Freuer, whose hands are never idle.

Her home in Poe Valley is a shining example of her aptitudes . . . she turns from one task to another as easily as a sunflower turns to follow the sun . . . she is chairman for the third consecutive year of the Poe Valley-Olene Home Extension Unit . . . has put to practical use every single project she has completed . . . from turning discarded peanut butter jars into attractive vases to making her own smart purses.

Her hooked rugs, made from outmoded nylons . . . her linens frosted with hand-crocheted lace and textile painting . . . her lovely braided rugs . . . pieced quilts . . . the suits and frocks she makes, are works of art.

Her flair for interior decorating has developed a charming home . . . background for the lovely cranberry glass, sterling and pewter . . . china and oaken chests, heirlooms from England . . .

Margaret Freuer, a native of California and a teacher before she came to Oregon to live on the farm where her husband was born can plow a straight furrow and drive a dogie from the corn patch as easily as she slips a perfect cake from her electric oven . . . she gardens and writes . . . raises sweet peas and poultry . . . makes the whitest lye soap in the Klamath country . . . is thrilled with the electric power just brought to their farm Seven Springs, that makes light to shine from marvelous old prism lamps in every room.

She reads and ponders deeply on world affairs . . . she kneads yeast breads and cooks a toothsome pie . . . her fruit cellar overflows with the preserved products of the farm . . . she finds time to write "most every day" to a son, Edward, junior at Oregon State.

Just now she is busy with a hobby, the making of seven cook books and when day is done, the Freuers, Margaret and her husband, often go square dancing.

NOPE!

Do you know that your nails grow faster in the summer than winter, faster in childhood than adulthood, that it takes nearly 150 days for nails to grow from the matrix to the ends of the fingers.

HEED THIS

It's a fact that nail lacquer dries from the surface to the nail, not from the nail out. So, while the nail seems to be dry in a few minutes, care should be taken for at least an hour after application so as not to damage the lacquer.

A reading light should be tall enough to allow the arc of light to completely cover the book or paper.
