THIS IS EASTER

What is Easter? Easter is the black velvet oriental night, the silvery soft light of a star, and a small mean chalk cave; the warm close presence of resting animals, and a woman and a small babe that reaches out with tiny hands and lifts your heart away. It is a million hosts of angels singing Gloria!

It is three anxious days of searching 'mid the streets of Jerusalem while a mother stops each small child and looks to see, and asks: "Have you seen a boy, just so? My boy!" And the ever conscious awareness of the slave market throws terror deep into her soul. Then a little Boy is found midst the wise ones of the world, in a House of Prayer, teaching.

Six large stone jars are there filled with water, when suddenly, there is wine because two were joined in love and a woman said: "They have no Leprous bodies cleansed, crooked limbs straightened, eyes that have seen the light of the sun but a short time, and ears that listen curiously to the song of a bird; all these are there and an alabaster jar, smashed.

It is also a wooden fishing boat lifted and tossed with a surging fear of wave and blustery driving wind, a cry for help, and suddenly there is Peace.

A whinning post is there and the naked body bent, and the terrible flagella with leather thongs on which are spaced bits of bone to dig and tear rough little furrows in the flesh; and a drunken garrison of poor blind men, mocking, cursing, bloodspattered, and the dull thudding snap of blood soaked leather lash and the ripped wounds. It is a trail of bloody footsteps marked in the stones of a street and the scrape of a dragging timber and the shuddering of the earth.

Then, three days hence, in the secret silence of another night and cave that body lives again, and leaves, and makes no mark of its passing. Men come and see where it had been, and hold the knowledge in their hearts, and wonder. And the slow dawning realization floods over them, and they cannot quite understand but they know that nothing will ever be the same again.

Suddenly He is there; the Wounds are there; the Knowledge of His Presence and Peace.
