Columbia Flood Threat Eases

BOISE, Idaho (AP)—A heavy April rainfall and below-normal precipitation has eased the flood threat in the Columbia River basin, a cooperative federal-state report said Thursday.

Heavy rains and high temperatures during May could still result in high water on most of the major rivers, however, the report said. Some rivers which spilled over their banks in April may continue to flood and high water is expected on others which haven't reached their peak flow yet, the report said.

The large volume of water which went down the Columbia River past The Dalles, Ore., during April will reduce the peak discharge yet to come, the report said. The flow was 16.5 million acre feet, 40 percent above normal.
