Mock Meet Draws Top Politicians

SALEM (AP)—Willamette University's mock Republican national convention drew nearly 250 delegates from 11 colleges Friday and real-life Eisenhower men were in the top spots.

Sen. Wayne Morse is chairman. He is a strong backer of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower. Sen. Frank Carlson of Kansas also gave keynote address before the evening nominating and balloting. He too is in Oregon to support the general.

Elsewhere around the state other politicians were out seeking to stir up voter support in the May 16 primary election. Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee will join the group next week for intensive state coverage.

This capital city was the central spot Friday night; Gov. Earl Warren of California, urging his own candidacy, told a Republican rally that the party has to provide leadership in the country doesn't have now and meet the demand of the people for "rugged honesty in every branch of the government."

While that was going on, Harold E. Stassen, also a Republican candidate said this country should stop being Santa Claus to foreign countries but that it should provide help on a sound basis. And everywhere, he said, America should help colonial peoples to get independence.

A third major address of Friday night was by Sen. Carlson who spoke at Medford in behalf of Eisenhower. Although he made no mention of the steel seizure by name, he quoted from a statement he said Eisenhower made several weeks ago in which the general spoke of the dangers of government control of property. That, he said, shows Eisenhower's position.

Although the action this week has been mostly concentrated on the Republican side, Democrats outside of Portland will have a chance next week to hear Sen. Kefauver. Tuesday noon he will speak at Salem, then follow with brief talks at Monmouth, Corvallis and Eugene Wednesday he will be at Pendleton, Prineville, Bend and Klamath Falls and the next day, Thursday, he will be at Ashland, Grants Pass, Medford and Roseburg.

Oregon Registrations Set All-Time Record

SALEM (AP)—The largest number of persons in history, 777,945, are eligible to vote in next Friday's Oregon primary election. David O'Hara, chief of the State Elections Bureau, announced Friday.

The official registration totals give the Republicans a margin of 7,842 over the Democrats, who held the lead for both 1930 elections for the first time since voters have been registered in Oregon.

The totals for this year's primary include 387,717 Republicans, 380,075 Democrats, 3,507 Independents, 186 Progressives, 233 Prohibitionists, 156 Socialists, and 6,071 others.

The new registration figure is 26.275 greater than the total for the 1930 general election. This fact indicates a great interest in the primary.

The registration total of 777,945 compares with the registration for recent elections as follows: 1930 general, 751,370; 1930 primary, 711,719; 1948 general, 694,635; and 1948 primary, 635,631.

This means there now are 142,314 more persons eligible to vote than there were in the state's last presidential primary in 1948.

The Republican margin of 7,842 compares with a Democratic lead of 17,199 at the 1930 general election, and a Democratic margin of 8,337 at the 1930 primary.

Fourteen of the 36 counties have more Democrats than Republicans. They are Baker, Columbia, Coos, Crook, Deschutes, Harney, Jefferson, Klamath, Lake, Linn, Multnomah, Tillamook, Union and Wallowa.

Price Regulations Turn Grocers to Bookworms

By FRANCIS J. KELLY
WASHINGTON (AP)—If your butcher's turned into a bookworm and your grocer's engrossed in a graph, a couple of food dealers hinted Friday that the government's price control regulations may be responsible.

John J. Drait of the National Association of Retail Grocers told the House Banking Committee he has grave doubts about the practicality of making 9,900 words on frozen fruits and berries required reading for busy store manager.

Charles W. Bauer, president of the National Association of Retail Meat and Food Dealers, testified it would take a veterinarian or at least a college graduate to plot his course through the Office of Price

Stabilization directions on cutting and trimming a loin of beef.

The official instructions refer among other things to "a flat plane parallel with the flat surface supporting the full loin" and to "an imaginary line parallel with the full length of the protruding edge of the lumbar section of the chin bone." That's what it says.

CROWDED OFF
Drait and Bauer showed up Thursday to make their pitch for suspending price ceilings on food in plentiful supply, but were crowded off the committee program then by an early session of the House.

They finally left their statements and evidence for the committee record after being crowded off the witness list again Friday.

Drait brought with him two fat volumes which he said contained the official reading matter with which the government thought retail grocers should be acquainted.

The list, he said, includes 43 regulations plus 168 amendments and supplements, totaling approximately 360,700 words. He said a typical one of 5,000 words was entitled "adjustment of ceiling prices on pork loins weighing 16 pounds or less" and prescribing nine steps in the average retail grocer. Selling mechanism is only a small part of the overall operation.

You've got to order the stuff, see, to get it into the store, put it on the shelves, mark on the price, trim the meat, place the fresh produce in the bins, answer customers' questions, prepare advertising, sweep out the store, keep the books, prepare the tax reports and pay the bills.

And then, if there's any time left, curl up with the government's CPR 113 on white potatoes (27,900 words.)
