

Washington, Oregon Urge N.W. Construction Work

WASHINGTON (AP) — Governors of Washington and Oregon joined other Pacific Northwest spokesmen Wednesday in urging the Senate Appropriations Committee to back a 169 million dollar Army Engineer construction program in that area.

House action in cutting 66 million from the program, they said, endangers not only the regional economy but also its contribution to the defense effort.

President Truman's budget calls for the 169 million to be spent in the year beginning July 1.

Washington's Gov. Langlie, and Oregon's Gov. McKay both told the committee the House action was "poor economy."

Ample Funds For Columbia?

SPOKANE (AP) — Sen. Magnuson (D-Wash.) said Wednesday the Columbia Basin Irrigation project "is assured of ample funds for the coming fiscal year."

He told a reporter he feels sure the Senate will restore funds, cut by the House, for Chief Joseph, Albeni Falls and The Dalles dam. McNary Dam, he said, will also have ample funds.

Magnuson said the Atomic Energy Commission is ready to make a strong plea for construction of the proposed Ice Harbor Dam on the Snake River as a defense project.

"Ice Harbor is not out of the picture," he said. The dam, which would be built near Pasco and the Atomic Energy plant at Richland, has been authorized by Congress but no money has been appropriated for it.

Magnuson flew in from Washington Wednesday or speaking engagements Thursday at Grand Coulee and at the state Democratic convention here Saturday.

Anglers Tell Double Story

SEATTLE (AP) — Fred Alm, 18, tells a two-fisted fish story.

Fred and a companion, Rodney Stover, 17, were trolling in Lake Sammamish for cutthroat, using spoons (Gardner Wonder).

Having no luck, the two Mercer Island youths pulled into a dock at Rosemont Beach on the west shore of the lake. More for practice than anything else, they began casting their spoons out into the lake.

Rod got a snarl in his line and dropped his spoon into the water while he untangled it. Wham! Another four-pound bass hit his lure.

Rod found himself with a light pole in each hand struggling with eight pounds of fish. Fred returned with the net and together they landed both.

McKay agreed. He declared the federal government instead of saving money would lose many millions of dollars if it stops construction of The Dalles dam and forces the contractor to disrupt the working schedule.

The committee plans to hold a hearing May 26 on Ice Harbor Dam, a Snake river project for which Truman asked five million dollars. The house allowed nothing.

C. A. Erdahl, chairman of the Pacific Northwest Utilities Conference Committee, composed of public and private utilities, testified Washington, Oregon and Northern Idaho need 500,000 kilowatts more each year in keep step with growing power needs.

Asserting non-federal utilities are doing their best to meet this demand, he declared they will spend between 1952 and 1957 approximately $1,031,260,799 on project construction.

House cuts in the Northwest power program, he said, pose the threat of power shortages, in the event of low water, amounting to 700,000 kilowatts in the 1953-54 winter.

RATION

As a result, he continued, "we may very shortly be required to put all power users on a curtailed use basis from Sept. 1 to Nov. 15, drop all interruptible loads around the clock for as long as 7 and 12 months of each year, use all high cost steam power available, and even then, call upon all our public to share in the restrictions."

Only one discordant note crept into the otherwise unified presentation.

Representatives of the Warm Springs and Umatilla Indians renewed their opposition to construction of The Dalles Dam.

They said if it is considered necessary for national defense they would drop their objections, if compensated for the loss of their fishing grounds at Celilo Falls.

Leland Brown, The Dalles, Ore., attorney, said negotiations are underway with Army Engineers to determine the proper amount of damages which flooding of the fishing grounds would cause.

He said the Indians have rejected an offer of 23 million dollars as too low.
