Robbery Attempt Said Failure

Attempt to enter Fred E. Barnett Co., 600 Spring Street, over the weekend, was unsuccessful, according to City Police.

R. T. Lewis, an employe, discovered the burglary attempt Sunday morning. He said the glass from a side door was broken, but nothing was taken from the place.

Fall Injures Elderly Man

A 70-year-old Palmerton Lumber Co. watchman, Dave Turner, Pelican Hotel, was hurt in a fall at 7th and Klamath early Monday morning.

Turner was taken to Klamath Valley Hospital by Kaler's ambulance. He was released after treatment for a forehead cut and bloody nose.

SHOOTS JUDGE

CAIRO (AP) — An Arab news agency dispatch from Bazhdad said an attorney, Said El Aaragi, walked into a court at Al Hella Sunday and shot to death Judge El Sayed Taha El Shaklhi, who had dismissed an appeal against a three months sentence passed on the lawyer's brother.

HOLLYWOOD movie cameras are being frequently focussed these days on Ava Norring (above), a promising newcomer to the screen.

Three Persons Lost Sunday

By The Associated Press

Three Portland residents, one of them a 10-year-old boy, were missing Sunday and feared drowned.

The boy, Frank Hayhurst, was lost when a boat overturned in the Clackamas River near Carver. Three other children and a man were rescued.

Warren Legler, about 20, was believed drowned in the Wind River near Stevenson, Wash. He was fishing when a falling rock caused him to lose his footing and plunge into the river.

Richard Wayne Glazebrook, 18, drowned in an unsuccessful attempt to swim across the Sandy River near the Sandy Bridge.

Gard Elected GOP Leader

PORTLAND (AP) — Jesse Gard of Portland was swept into office as Oregon Republican National Committeeman on the Eisenhower landslide in Friday's primary election.

He defeated Lowell Paget, Taft's Oregon campaign manager, by a 5 to 4 margin. After Paget came Charles L. Paine, Portland realtor, then Glenn R. Jack, Oregon City lawyer.

Ralph Cake, incumbent, did not seek re-election.

Monroe Sweetland, incumbent, won the Democratic committeeman post, defeating Portland tire dealer Mike DeCicco almost 3 to 1.

Mrs. Margaret Cawood and Mrs. Lillian M. Burton, both of Portland, were running a close race for Democratic National committeewoman. The winner will not be known until virtually all the votes are counted.

Liquor Chief Quitting Post

SALEM (AP) — William A. Bingham, administrator for the Oregon Liquor Control Commission, will resign soon from his $7,900 a year job, commission officials reported.

Robert W. Elfstrom, Salem, commission chairman, said Bingham was planning to return to private business. He formerly was associated with a soft drink concern.

Bingham was appointed a commission member in January, 1950, and in September, 1951, he succeeded William H. Hammond as administrator.

Free Lights For Bikes

Boy and Girl students of city schools who take their bicycles to school Tuesday will get Scotch lights free of charge in the annual saftey project sponsored by the Exchange Club. The red warning light will be installed for the riders.

Following the luncheon meeting, members of the club will divide into teams and will visit every school in town between the hours of 1 and 2:30 p.m.

Principals have been notified of the plan.

Should any student be missed this week, a light will be available May 27 if the wheel is taken to the school building.

Camera Won't Show What's Meant To Be Seen in Film

By ERSKINE JOHNSON

HOLLYWOOD— (NEA) —Movies Without Popcorn: Linda Darnell and Gary Merrill are the stars before the camera in Fox's "Night Without Sleep," a suspense thriller about a composer who believes he has murdered his wife.

They play their scene under Roy Baker's direction in the shell of a limousine, dismantled except for the back seat and rear window. I notice that luscious Linda draws her mink coat about her each time Baker calls for "Camera." It turns out that Linda hasn't bothered to put on the dress provided by the studio. Instead, she's wearing her own black lace underslip.

You just can't tell what movie queens are wearing—or not wearing—underneath their mink coats in Hollywood.

An artificial ocean has been created for UI's "City Beneath the Sea," an adventure flicker about a sunken treasure. Director Budd Boetticher is lining up an action shot in which Bob Ryan and Tony Quinn, as deep-sea divers, plunged into the briny.

On a small banana boat, Mala Powers stands by with other actors who play members of the treasure-seeking expedition.

There's a realistic backdrop of Jamaica, too, and I overheard a set visitor say:

"Why, it's so real I can almost see Errol Flynn."

Burt Lancaster, his sun-bleached hair grayed and plastered down to his head, Shirley Booth, Philip Ober and a swarm of extras are attending a meeting of Alcoholics Anonymous on Hal Wallis' "Come Back, Little Sheba" set at Paramount.

When Director Daniel Mann is finally satisfied with the highly dramatic sequence, another touching drama fragment takes place off-stage. The extras pass a woman wearing dark glasses on the sidelines and fail to recognize her. She is the producer's wife, but in the days before sound swept in, she was the screen's leading comedienne. Her name? Louise Fazenda.

Marge and Gower Champion, Monica Lewis and newcomer Dean Miller are at work in a musical, "Everything I Have Is Yours," at MGM.

It's the story of a dance team who split up when the wife finds that she is expecting a baby. Marge and Gower, who are married for real, play the partners.

Today Marge is wearing maternity clothes and goes into some strenuous limbering-up exercises out of camera range just as a studio policeman ushers a party of tourists onto the sound stage. A few seconds later I hear one of the women in the group say:

"Really, somebody should speak to that young woman. Does her obstetrician allow her to turn cartwheels in her condition?"

It's a riddle-me-this scene that Jane Wyman and Will Rogers, Jr., are playing against the background of New York in 1913 for "The Story of Will Rogers." Will, Jr., is playing the role of his own famous father and has just discovered that Jane, as Mrs. Rogers, is knitting tiny garments for her first stork date.

Director Michael Curtiz carefully rehearses Will, Jr., in the exact shade of emotion that he is to register. But even Laurence Olivier would have trouble with the situation and the lines.

The unborn child that has Will, Jr., bursting with paternal pride is himself. Try that in front of your mirrow

Director Bob Parrish is putting George Sanders and Marta Toren through their paces in "Assignment—Paris" at Columbia.

Thanks to a trick process shot, Marta and George are in a car racing through the streets of Paris, with George at the wheel. But the director halts the scene. Will a make-up man put some grease paint on George's hands? The British actor balks at first, but finally extends his mitts.

"He's always kicking about make-up," a crew member growls behind me. "Who does he think he is that he doesn't need make-up—his wife, Zsa Zsa Gabor?"

Irene Dunne, vexed by money troubles, is playing a domestic scene with Dean Jagger as her hubby in "It Grows on Trees." Later in the script, Irene will discover that her backyard trees have sprouted $5 and $10 bills!

As Irene and Dean discuss the family budget, I notice that there are framed photographs of their screen children, Joan Evans and Dee Pollard, on the walls of the set. These are actual photographs borrowed from the parents of Joan and Dee.
