Blackberry vines down the Umppqua and up the Coos rivers are hanging full of red fruit... the big Himalayas that count up fast... if you stay free of briars... should be ready for picking about mid-August. If you've never driven up a winding river, wandering to the sea past ancient old barns and criss-cross rail fences, and seen the BLACKBERRIES hanging black and plump and full of juice, if you've never shivered with anticipation of a glass of jelly, come snow (we always hoard ours), if you've never strained to reach that HURGE one beyond your finger tips or gloated over a brimming pail, you've missed a lot of living and you'd better get this year to the spots where the blackberries grow.
