BILL-BOARD

By BILL JENKINS

Oregon seems to have done pretty well by itself as far as advertising for the Fourth of July celebration is concerned. In browsing through the magazines I notice that we managed, as a state, to break into two national publications. Both Crater Lake and the Columbia River Gorge were featured in full page color pictures in Holiday and the Columbia Gorge made it again in an ad in Colliers. Nothing like getting word of the state around. Can't do any harm and might bring a flock of people in.

We hope that there will be a good turnout for the big Fourth of July roundup here. A lot of work, a lot of appreciation and a lot of thought has gone into planning the show. Klamath's rodeo is rapidly rising in the ranks of the big circuit towns. We've come from a small local show to one of the ten ranking national cowboy shows in the country. All that isn't done without effort. And that effort won't pay off without the support of the local people. It's our show, so let's make it a success. And a lot of fun on top of that.

In fact Klamath Falls will have two Fourth of July's this year. Because the Legion confab will be coming in another three weeks and they should, if they are anywhere near up to standard, furnish us with more fireworks and fun. We're glad to welcome them to town. Corrections in the news: A directive from the boss of the travel and recreational department of the California state chamber informs us that the Wagona Hotel in Yosemite has not collapsed from the weight of the snow as was previously reported. So if you were planning to go there go right ahead. The one that did collapse was the Big Trees Lodge in Mariposa Grove. Don't go there to sleep. Only the cafeteria is open.

California Travel Notes: The longest festival name on the coast goes to the Santa Barbara Semana Nautica, Water and Land Sports Festival slated for the 4th, 5th and 6th in that town. You can compete for some thirty sports in that event if you should wish to go. If you don't like that you can spend a ten day period at the Adelanto site of the West Coast Soaring Championships. The first man to go from there to Salt Lake City, Utah, will win a prize of $500. If I have time to ferret the old glider out of the attic remind me to rush right down there.

Or, if you don't like that sort of thing, you can go to Hemet for a quiet Fourth. The town will be celebrating "Apricot Time" and several orchards will be open where people may arrange for their own "you-pick" programs. And what could be quieter than waiting for an apricot to ripen?

UGHT IN THE ROUNDS

Who says that the "younger generation" is going to the dogs? or that you can't get the youngsters to do any work nowadays?

A quick check through the wanted pages one day last week showed that you had your pick of 19 girls who were asking for baby sitting jobs, nine girls who wanted to do housework and one girl who offered to do any kind of chores. The boys weren't far behind. You had your choice of 13 boys for lawn and yard work; and nine boys who wanted any kind of work.

That all was in one day's paper. The reason for so many at once, of course, was Free Want-Ad Week for boys and girls of 16 years age and under.

There was an ulterior motive in the free offer of the classified department of this paper. The idea was to show the youngsters that they could use the want-ads to find jobs and sell their toys—so they could find it profitable to spend a few cents to get the job done from now on.

A lot of them did find that it worked—we know — because they called back to cancel the ads.

Just how many have regular paying summer chores as a result of the ads, we don't know. We do know that it takes two to make a bargain and that it always takes quite a little coaching and helping on the part of the adult employer to get a young worker "on the beam."

If you have been one who sometimes muttered about the "younger generation" we suggest that you not only take up a youngster on an offer to work but that you make an extra effort to see that a good job is done, on a continuing basis.

We'll go even further and suggest that if you didn't make a connection through the Free Want-Ad Week offerings, and if you don't find what you want in Situations Wanted tonight, that you go ahead and run an ad of your own (at regular rates, of course) in Help Wanted, to get the project under way.

You see, there's an ulterior motive to this, too.

Practically everyone who lives in the country, and even nearly all of those who are city-dwellers, have at one time or another suffered with chigger bites. The pesky little chigger has indeed been responsible for many sleepless nights.

The chigger is a six-legged, red, undeveloped form of mite. At this stage of its development, the mite apparently must become a parasite in order to live and tries to attach itself to some domestic animal, bird or human being.

If a person walks through underbrush or deep grass, he is likely to contact these undeveloped mites. It is the feet and legs which are most likely to be attacked. Chiggers crawl on the skin and when they meet an obstacle, such as a garter or belt, they are likely to stop and bite, fastening themselves to the surface of the skin.

They do not burrow into the skin but attach themselves to it by claws. The mite fills with tissue fluids and drops off after a few hours, leaving a spot on the skin which is likely to itch severely. A red welt forms at the point where the mite drops off.

There are three ways of treating chigger bites. One is to catch the mite when it is first attached and remove it. This is not so difficult except that these insects are very small and often are not seen at all unless the skin is examined closely and immediately after they have attached themselves.

The second line of attack is to relieve the severe itching, since the itching usually continues for days after removal of the mite. Itching can be relieved by touching the area with rubbing alcohol three times a day, followed immediately by some anti-itching oil such as standard boric acid ointment with a little phenol, usually 1 per cent, added to it.

This ointment should be applied only in small quantities after the alcohol — about three times a day as needed to relieve the itch. It is rubbed in gently and what is left is wiped off with a little cotton. In addition to relieving the itch, this treatment may prevent infection with germs which often follows scratching.

Of course, no treatment is as satisfactory as prevention. If a person is likely to come in contact with tall grass or other vegetation on which chiggers are likely to exist, high boots or long trousers may be sufficient to prevent the mites from reaching the skin.

Lying in the grass on a picnic is an excellent way to get chigger bites. Dusting the skin with powder of sulphur will usually ward off these troublesome mites if exposure is expected or cannot be avoided.

Momentous questions which have bothered songsmiths no end have remained unanswered these many years. They pass on to our children as poses beyond solution, further proof to posterity that we left the world in a sorry mess.

Take that touching plea of the repentant spouse of Mr. William Bailey Esq., for example. She wailed: "Won't You Come Home, Bill Bailey!" Her message was shouted from every vaudeville stage and square piano in the land, but there's no record that Bill ever heard or responded.

How lamentable! You'll recall how the wretched woman repented turning Bill out "one stormy evening with nothing but a fine tooth comb." "I'll do the cookin' honey, I'll pay the rent, I know I've done you wrong, I know I'm to blame, ain't it a shame, Bill Bailey won't you please come home!"

Poor Bill, wonder what became of him? Equally touching is the unanswered query of the pestered mother, a tear jerker of the 90s. "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight?"

At the time I thought I knew. At least there were not too many places to look. It was even money that the scallawag was down at the Hunky Tunk playing pool. I'm not, perhaps it's just as well that nobody ever told the lady where her wandering boy hid out.

The microgladion of one balladist nearly caused a second war in 1898. To this day it can start a fight down at Finnigan's Thirst Quenching Emporium. He wanted to know "Who Threw the Overall in Mistress Murphy's Chowder?"

Typical of Irish loyalty is the fact that men have been carried out on stretchers when the question came up but nary a name has ever been mentioned.

There are other puzzlers left for the Irish, such as "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" "Are You There, Moriarty?" "Are You the Son of O'Reilly?" And since Joe Sullivan asked it in 1888 no Irishman has answered "Where did you Get That Hat?"

The song search for missing women was going on long before Librettist Ager asked: "I Wonder What's Become of Sally?" I never had much sympathy for Ager. On his own confession he had the wonderful Sally in the bag—let her out, they went at it wrong. By the time he got through extolling Sally, any guy who had his clutches on her would have been a sucker to give her up.

Of other girls like Sally, Tin Pan Alley inquired for years: "I Wonder Where She is Tonight?" "I Wonder who's Kissing Her Now?" "Old Pal, Why Don't You Answer Me?" "Can't You Hear Me Calling Caroline?" "Aren't You Coming Back to Old New Hampshire, Molly?"

Finally somebody wrote "Why Was I Born?" It was a good question and a suffering public chorused "Search Me!"

Just the same, from Harrigan & Hart to Irving Berlin there's a store of a hundred urgent song questions stored away in treasure.

KLAMATH TEMPLE'S new annex is rapidly taking shape with many volunteer workers aiding. The $30,000 project will give the Temple nine Sunday School rooms, a small auditorium, baptistry and other facilities.
