ON THE HOUSE

By DAVID G. BAREUTHER, AP Real Estate Editor

Lots of householders, especially new home owners, pride themselves on some piece of camparatively new-fangled electrical equipment—a dishwashing machine a garbage grinder in the sink drain, or in some cases even an electric elevator running up the side of a staircase. Yet the same homes can be so poorly lightd that they're a generation behind what they could be.

It's enough to make you rub your eyes to read that it would take 100 years to bring the average home up to date in lighting at the rate we have been glowing One expert contends that lighting in the bulk of homes is as obsolete as the old-fashioned ice box or wash tub.

According to the power industry, the use of electricity in home has increased almost seven times since 1914, but over the same period the use of electricity in lighting our houses has increased less than three times. The rest has been going for the gadgets.

Since electrical appliances in general became part of household equipment, their share of the electricity used in homes has jumped about 1,000 times. This means something when you consider the fact that more than 90 per cent of all houses (both farm and city) now have electric lights, while only seven of the 31 modern appliances are in use in more than 50 per cent of our homes.

There seems to be plenty of room for improvement in lighting. And it doesn't have to be costly. Engineers for the General Electric Lamp Department at Nela Park, Cleveland, figure that an average new three-bedroom house (a 1,000 square-foot house) can be equipped for adequate lighting including both permanent fixtures and movable lamps, for $375. Furthermore, you can get a lot more light for your money out of electric wires than you can get heat or motor power for appliances.

Apparently most of us simply don't use enough bulbs or strong enough bulbs. For example, the experts say that a floor lamp for reading ought to have a three-stage 100-200-300 watt bulb, plus a 32-watt circular flourescent tube. For a table lamp used for reading, the prescription is the same flourescent tube with at least a 150-watt bulb. Even a desk lamp is supposed to have a 50-100-150-watt three-light bulb, or a 150-watt frosted bulb.

Two kinds of light are considered necessary for every room—a special light on your work and general lighting to eliminate eye-straining contrasts.

For general room lighting there has been a noticeable trend toward lighted valances — an outer wall over windows, on inner walls over pictures, or both. These fixtures highlight draperies and other decoration, provide indirect light reflected from walls and ceilings, and create illusions of space in small rooms.

You can buy lighting valances ready to put up and plug in, or you can make them very easily. They conceal fluorescent tubes, the white light of which brings out colors rather than altering them.

These valances are not supposed to be hung closer than 10 inches down from the ceiling. If the top of such a valance has to be closer to the ceiling, the top can be covered to avoid a hard light line on the ceiling.

For an average living room 16 feet of valance lighting is rated a minimum. It can be run along one wall, or broken into sections. But no section is supposed to be less than 4 feet long. In such setups 20, 25, or 40-watt fluorescent tubes are fitted end to end for the entire length.

A booklet, entitled "How to Light condition Your Home," is published by General Electric and distributed through power companies, home shows and various light fixture stores. It gives exact measurements for the efficient placing of various lamps in every room in a house.

In fact the industry in general seems bent on getting us to use different lighting fixtures whether we like them or not. At a recent lamp show in New oYrk, the National Home Lamp Council decided that floor lamp sales have been "dwindling." So an "educational" campaign was launched to get us to buy more floor lamps "as opposed to fixed or louvered lighting."

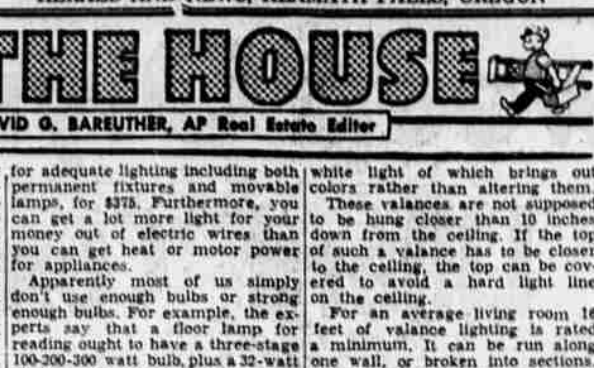
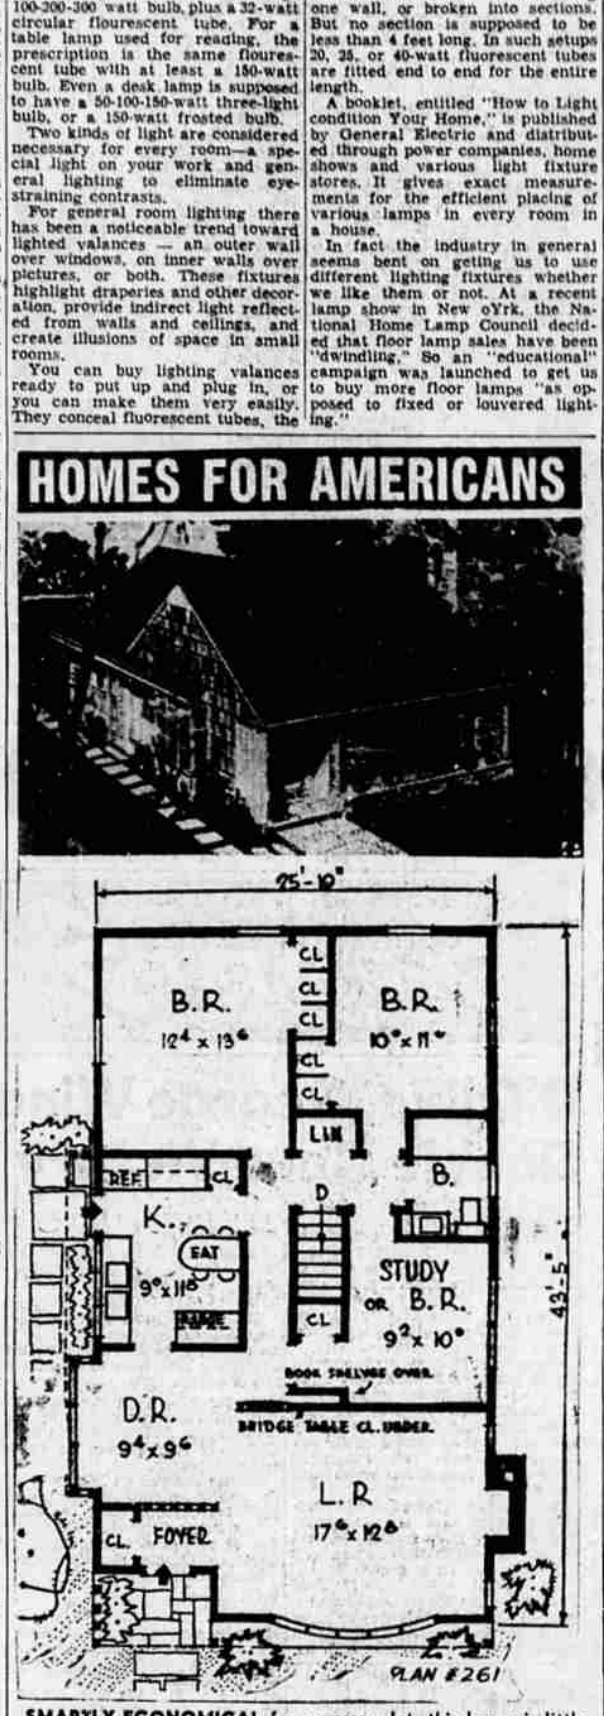
HOMES FOR AMERICANS





SMARTLY ECONOMICAL for a narrow lot, this house is little more than 28 feet wide at its widest point. It covers only 1,115 square feet. Careful planning makes the bathroom convenient to all bedrooms as well as to kitchen and side door. A bowed window in front distinguishes the living room and a bay window at the side lights the dining room. This is Plan 261 by Edward R. Tyler, architect, 586 Macon Place, Uniondale, N. Y. (Further information and plans available from architect)

Douglas To Tour Malaya

PORTLAND (AP) — William O. Douglas, the widely-travelled U.S. Supreme Court justice, plans to tour Malaya this summer.

Douglas, who is here for a hearing on a tax fraud case, said Friday he plans to fly to the Philippines and then Malaya next week. He expects to get up a pack train at Singapore and make a 400 mile trip up the peninsula.

Elon Gilbert, a Yakima fruit grower, might accompany him.
