Men Display Unusual Bravery In Saving Burning US Ship

TOKYO (AP) — Seconds after a jet plane exploded on the U. S. carrier Boxer, R. W. Chapman, aviation mechanic third class, disregarded bullets flying through the air to drag another sailor from beneath the burning plane.

The U. S. Navy Far East Headquarters, reporting the first eyewitness accounts of the disaster, said this set the pattern for individual bravery in controlling the fire Wednesday. Nine men were killed and 75 injured.

The Boxer is en route from Korean waters to the Yokosuka Naval Base, about 30 miles south of Tokyo.

Chapman, of Houston, Texas, was playing water on the burning plane when he spotted Airman Ralph L. Finley of Fort Belvoir, Mo., lying under the plane seriously injured. He rushed into the danger area and dragged him to safety.

"No troops ever fought a battle more bravely than the men of the USS Boxer fought the fire on the bullet-swept, bomb-torn, flaming hangar deck," radioed Capt. Marshall B. Gurney of Postland, Me. Cmdr. Kenneth McAfee, gunnery officer, Battle Creek, Mich., called for three men to handle a hose and Senior Chaplain George Hogan of Russellville, Ark., not in line.

"I didn't mean you," McAfee protested.

"I can work as well as anyone else," snapped the chaplain.

Cady E. Leib, aviation boat-swain's mate third class of Winchester, Ill., directed the movement of planes away from the fire and then went on a one-man life-saving spree.

He donned an oxygen breathing apparatus and saved four men from a smoke filled compartment above the hangar deck. Then he made two trips below to rescue five more. In addition he recovered two bodies of men suffocated by the heat.

Fireman John Lewis, Jr., San Francisco, working without an oxygen mask, rescued at least 11 men and possibly 15 — from fire rooms three and four. He stopped only when overcome by smoke.

Mr. and Mrs. Rex Darnell, Walla Walla, Wash., have been houseguests at the home of their parents Mr. and Mrs. Ray Darnell, 1000 N. Commercial, since the small son Thomas Richard. While they were still here Mrs. Clifford Jeffords and children, Nancy and Clifford arrived from San Diego to spend several days with Mrs. Jeffords parents.

Motoring to Eugene to attend the opening of a new store belonging to her father and brother, was Mrs. William Taylor and children, Friday August 1. The store is in the building where the hardware store, Mr. W. E. Heinke and Mr. W. G. Heinke are the owners. After having coffee and cake there they motored to Corvallis to visit Mrs. Ned Myers, who is recovering from an emergency operation and then on to Salem to spend the night with a cousin, Mrs. Ray Fiske.

Fort Klamath Community Works Hard For Church

During the past year, a little-publicized contest has been underway among churches in the state of Oregon — it is the Town and Country Church Improvement Project, sponsored by the Sears Roebuck Foundation, in which four cash awards were offered for churches having the largest percentage of improvements in buildings, grounds and service.

Churches were divided into three categories. 1. Open country churches, 2. Churches located in towns of 1000 or less population, 3. Churches in town of 1000 or more.

Fifty-three churches participated in the statewide contest, and Fort Klamath Community Methodist Church was entered in the second division. During the year, several noteworthy improvements have been made by church members, many by cooperation of other local residents. On the grounds, trees were planted by the Fort Klamath Explorer Scouts, and flowers are blooming in the churchyard now, as a result of work done this spring by women church members.

Boy Scouts of Fort Klamath added their bit to the project by making and erecting a large sign directing strangers to the church. They were assisted by Scoutmaster Frank Strahan and Explorer leader Wilbur Hessecock.

The Civic Improvement Club, local incorporated women's organization, was responsible for having the front church steps repaired and also purchased large iron gates which will be installed in the near future. Also this spring women church members painted the chairs in the interior of the church.

Recently a committee from the Oregon Council of Churches visited here, inspecting the improvements made and taking pictures of the exterior surroundings and grounds of the local church. Their findings were duly recorded for judging in the contest.

Last week, Rev. C. Ellery Echlin, pastor of Fort Klamath and Chiloquin Methodist churches, received a communication and certificate from Gilbert B. Christian, executive secretary of the Oregon Council of Churches in Portland, congratulating him on the splendid job done by the local church in its improvements in building and services for the Sears Roebuck Foundation Town and Country Church Improvement Project, and advising him that the Council had voted to send him a certificate of merit.
