Top Level Indecision Slows Aircraft Production

WASHINGTON — Senate defense investigators said today an excess of gadgets and top level indecision have slowed down military aircraft production and prevented the development of adequate air defenses for the United States.

The highly critical report was the latest of a series from the Senate armed services preparedness subcommittee headed by Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D-Tex.).

In order to speed aircraft production to meet a possible Russian atomic attack, the report suggested appointment of a full-time production czar by the President and an overhauling of present basic defense legislation.

Some of the same recommendations were made last November by the same defense watchdog group but Chairman Johnson, in a separate statement, indicated they had not been carried out.

Johnson said the airplane build-up has been slowed down by a "capacity for indecision which at times has reached amazing levels."

Although the Defense Department did name a production czar, Johnson said, "he did not receive the necessary authority and eventually was reduced to the status of a job holder part-time." Aides of Johnson said this was Clay Bedford, industrial leader who was named special assistant to the secretary of defense.

The new report asked appointment of "a full-time production czar with powers to determine priorities, to freeze designs to the necessary extent, and to order quantity production initiated, so that our minimum air requirements are met as quickly as possible."

The report also called for a greater share of federal funds for air power and less for ground and sea arms.

The report was sharply critical of constant changes in models and additions of gadgets and gimmicks to aircraft designs. It said there was a need for design freezes and mass production.

"A tendency toward 'gimmickery' has loaded some of our planes with gadgets to a point where their effectiveness has been decreased," the report said.

No such tendency face Soviet Russia, the report indicated, saying: "When the Russians stop making tractors and start making tanks they can ill afford to permit such end items to become obsolete."

Some comments in the body of the report appeared more withering than the conclusion and recommendations.

An example: "As will be demonstrated, the history of our air buildup is a saga of bad programming, neglected warnings, lack of co-ordination, abuse, misuse, and misuse of power, had advice to the executive, and a general refusal on the part of our governmental agencies to pull together or work together in a dedicated way to strengthen our air arsenal."

Even two years after the surprise Communist attack in Korea, the report said "we have far less than the first-line aircraft we need."

"In our opinion, no business organization would countenance the excuses and self-serving justifications and self-serving justifications."
