Hull Remains Critically Ill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cordell Hull remained on the critical list Tuesday at the Bethesda (Md.) Naval Hospital.

A bulletin said: "Cordell Hull continues to show slight improvement this morning. His condition, however, remains critical."

The 80-year-old former secretary of state entered the hospital Friday for treatment for cerebral thrombosis.

There was a false alarm Monday that Hull had died. President Truman received a report, presumably from the White House, that the elder statesman had died in President Roosevelt's cabinet for three terms had died.

The President, traveling on a campaign train enroute to Milwaukee, got out a statement in Chicago saying "the people of the United States join with me in mourning the passing of one of this country's greatest statesmen, Cordell Hull."

Not long afterwards, however, it developed that the report of Hull's death had been in error.

The President put out a second statement at Milwaukee in which he said: "I am most pleased to hear that I was falsely informed that Cordell Hull had passed away."

White House aides said a transmission error was responsible for the false report.

The aides said that all of the messages on Hull's condition were correct as they left the White House but that one was garbled in transmission over the President's regular message facilities.

OLD CEMETERY FOUND

KHARTOUM — A Christian cemetery dating about 800 A.D. was uncovered by accident in the Gezira district. A sand hill was being dug up to provide building material when a large collection of bones and pottery was uncovered.

Spike Cashes In On Jim Cagney Likeness

By ERSKINE JOHNSON

HOLLYWOOD (NEA) — The Laugh Parade: Spike Jones frequently is mistaken for Jimmy Cagney but only once did he appreciate the physical similarity. Spike and his wife, Helen Grayco, were stuck at a table near the kitchen door in the dining room of a St. Louis hotel. The view of the floor show, and the service, were terrible.

Spike and Helen had a quick conference and then Helen went to a lobby phone, called the dining room and asked for Jimmy Cagney, describing the suit Spike was wearing. By the time Spike returned from answering the call they had a new table at ringside, half a dozen waiters were bowing and the food started flying.

A couple of teen-agers told their uncles they were rushing to a theater to see Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis and have a good cry. "But Martin and Lewis are comedians," the mother said. "Yeah, we know," chorused the junior misses, "but Johnnie Ray's on the stage in person."

Walter O'Keefe encountered a feminine constant from Texas on his "Double or Nothing" broadcast who said she made her living "topping."

"Oh," said puzzled O'Keefe, "but what is topping?"

"Well, not exactly like California," replied the Duke. "Over here we don't talk about it."

"When they count the house at a maternity hospital," Willard Waterman wants to know, "do you call it taking infantery?"

Paul S. Nathan in Publishers Weekly tells of the time that Sam Goldwyn, humorist H. Allen Smith and agent Bert Allenberg met to discuss a writing contract for Smith.

Goldwyn outlined a screen story idea and Smith agreed to whip it into screenplay form. Then the talk turned to salary and Goldwyn began to hedge. Smith had never written a movie before, Goldwyn pointed out, and this was a golden chance for him to learn the business from a master.

The opportunity that he was offering Smith could hardly be measured in terms of dollars, Goldwyn added.

There was a moment's silence, and finally Allenberg, in a quiet voice, said, "Sam, just how much tuition do you think Mr. Smith should pay you?"

Rural theater owner in Nevada to Director Lloyd Bacon's question about the starting time of the evening show.

"It's all according," said the showman, "short subjects start at sundown—features at moonup."
