Rush For Winter Clothes Catches Industry Napping

By SAM DAWSON

NEW YORK (AP) — An unexpected rush to get junior into cold-weather togs has caught the boys clothing industry short.

A rash of re-orders from stores across the nation has built up a production backlog that is delaying deliveries from three to six weeks.

Many makers of boys' coats, suits and outerwear have put their plants on two, and some on three, working shifts, trying to catch up.

"The most serious shortage of boys' clothing in ten years," is the way the Wool Bureau, Inc, described it Friday.

Eight of the leading boys' clothing manufacturers confirm that a snarl has suddenly developed in production and delivery.

Like many another manufacturer, they insist that merchants badly misjudged the strength of the fall and winter market.

The clothing manufacturers cut cloth to fit the orders they got from retailers, and the sudden rush of re-orders has caught all hands short.

Most of the out-of-town buyers, here to order for the Christmas trade, express surprise at the sudden shortage.

Some report that suppliers can't give near delivery on any but incomplete assortments of garments.

After a poor spring season, merchants were understandably reluctant to order heavily for fall.

Whether the merchants misjudged the demand or the manufacturers misjudged the merchants, the sudden desire to get junior into new clothes is heartening to most of the industry.

Part of the increase in demand comes from the growing population of youngsters—the war babies now crowding into schoolrooms.

Some of the manufacturers, however, think hopefully that they are witnessing a new social trend among the young men—a desire to dress up and a reversal from recent years' trend toward sloppiness.

Demand this fall has centered in outerwear, topcoats, sports jackets and slacks.

The manufacturers say that reorders of sports jackets has been especially heavy. The junior sports staple.

The Wool Bureau also happily notes a general trend among the young toward "the wool look" with saxony, cheviot, homespun and a wide range of tweeds on the popularity list.

The emphasis on wool weaves, as opposed to smoother worsted fabrics, is more pronounced in boys' wear than in adult markets, the manufacturers say.

They are planning to stress lightweight woolens and worsted flannels and cheviots in the spring lines to be shown later this month.

As the Wool Bureau sees it, the trend reflects the lower prices of raw wool.

Builder Sees Long Boom

SPOKANE (AP)—An official of the American Institute of Architects predicts that the United States will continue its building boom for "four or five more years, perhaps longer."

Speaking at the first annual conference of the Northwest Regional Council of the AIA in Spokane Saturday, Edmund R. Purves of Washington, D. C., AIA executive director, said:

"There is a terrific backlog of demand for nearly all types of buildings."

Purves told about 100 western delegates to the three-day conference that the nation "needs thousands of new classrooms to take care of the youngsters now coming of school age. He added that thousands of obsolete classrooms must be replaced.

He also pointed out that hundreds of new hospitals are needed.

"We haven't scratched the surface of hospital building," he said. 'The Veterans' Administration overbuilt, but it was building for a certain segment of the population."

The architect said the demand for industrial structures is "not too great" now, but added that there still is considerable demand for commercial buildings.

Purves told the architects that "the outcome of the November election is going to have singularly little effect on the architectural profession."

He pointed out that public housing will be determined by economic necessity rather than political policies.

British Tailor Journal Says Adlai Best Dressed

By HAL COOPER

LONDON (AP) — Britain's sartorial bible, the Trade Journal Tailor and Cutter tried America's two men of the hour on for style Friday and raised a glad cry of "Stevenson-for-President."

The Bond Street oracle said the Illinois governor is so much better dressed than Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower that it may even cost him votes.

"He is our boy," wrote Editor John Taylor, who once touched off a transatlantic snarling match with the White House by dubbing Harry S. Truman "the worst-dressed man in Madame Tussaud's waxworks."

Taylor confessed an element of confusion in trying to size up the contenders fashionwise — "the clothes one might expect of each of the two candidates are found on what is apparently the wrong man." He explained:

"Rashly speaking, one can earmark the Democratic party as being that of the mass of the people and the Republican party as being the more interested in the industrial and commercial side of life.

"But the odd fact remains that the Democratic candidate has the more Republican appearance. Adlai Stevenson supports his elegant speech with an elegant sartorial background, and his appearance, far from being that of a middle western Democrat, smacks more of the British Foreign Office."

Taylor said Eisenhower, on the other hand, is a homespun type who looks like "a kind of military Will Rogers."

"He is not exactly tweedy, but to the voter in the 'sticks' his lean toward the more casual will suggest a fundamental sympathy with agricultural problems."

Unable to resist one more dig at President Truman, the editor told his British readers what has become of the Missourian:

"Mr. Truman, due doubtless to political pressure arising as a direct result of the Key West shirts he affects, is not to run again."

"Selling newspapers is a job that can't have changed much since I started doing it when I was only five years old. I remember well that it can be cold, uncomfortable work; but I remember, too, that it was rewarding, gratifying work and valuable training for later life. I'm proud that the nation has seen fit to honor this important public service with the new postage stamp. And I particularly want to congratulate the newspaperboys of today on the extra job they are doing to help sell United States Defense Bonds."

Court Asked To Study Tag

SALEM (AP) — The state Supreme Court was asked late Friday to decide whether the ballot measure attacking parimutuel betting should have a price tag on it to say how much money the state would lose under it.

Circuit Judge Rex Kimmell had ruled that the state law on such matters did not require that the ballot carry a revenue statement along with the measure.

It was this ruling that was appealed to the state's high court. Those bringing the appeal are District Attorney E. O. Stadter Jr.; Dr. Frank Menne, chairman of the State Racing Commission, and Frank Collins, chairman of a committee opposing the gambling ban.

The price tag had been left off the ballot title after Attorney General George Neuner advised that the law did not call for it. Opponents of the ban say the law does require a statement of how much money the state will lose if the measure passes.

COMING for the Klamath Basin Potato Festival, Oct. 1-18 at Merrill is Sam Coons, Baker County farmer, State Senator and Republican candidate for Congress. He is chairman of the Oregon Senate Agriculture Committee, and a member of the Senate Roads and Highway, Alcoholic Traffic, and Financial Affairs Committee, member of the Interstate Cooperation Commission, and an appointee by Gov. McKay on the Upper Columbia River Basin Commission. He will be accompanied by his wife.

'Truth Squad' Says HST Lies

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Three Republican senators accuse President Truman of attempting to "unload some of his tragic errors in foreign policy" onto the shoulders of the GOP presidential candidate, Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Describing themselves as a "truth squad," Sens. Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Ia.), and Francis Case (S. D.), issued a statement in answer to Truman's Saturday night foreign policy speech in Oakland.

The President had charged that Eisenhower "was personally involved in our decisions about Berlin and Korea," which led to the Berlin blockade and the North Korean invasion.

"He can explain from now until doomsday," retorted the senators, "but the blame for Berlin and Korea is his. Mr. Truman cannot wipe out the facts. He cannot shift the blame to those who had no choice but to carry out and execute his foreign policy decisions."

Truman had said Eisenhower, as a general and, later, chief of staff, participated in the high level decisions by furnishing advice.

"The President fired Gen. Douglas MacArthur on the ground that he interfered with policy-making," charged the Republican senators.

"Now he blasts Gen. Eisenhower because he did not disobey Mr. Truman's orders." Actually, they added, Eisenhower opposed policies which led to "disastrous decisions in Berlin and Korea."

They said the GOP nominee protested the agreement isolating Berlin behind the Russian zone of Germany, but was ignored.
