

"SUDDEN DEATH"

NEW YORK (AP)—The American Hockey League is again using the crowd-pleasing overtime period to settle tie games. The "sudden death" ten minute sessions have become a popular feature with the league's spectators in recent years. The first game this season to avert a deadlock with the overtime occurred when St. Louis defeated Pittsburgh with a goal in the extra session.

how competition influences prices

COMPETITION DIRECTLY INFLUENCES THE PRICES of most commodities, including lumber. When building is active and the demand for lumber exceeds the supply, competition is high among builders who want to obtain construction materials. This tends to raise prices. But, when building slackens and supplies of lumber pile up, the competition is strongest among the nation's sawmills who all want to sell their products. This tends to lower prices. In this way, lumber prices fluctuate up and down according to the law of supply and demand. The building supplies industry is a highly competitive one. There are 53,000 sawmills in America and many thousands of producers of lumber substitutes. For example, Weyerhaeuser Timber Company produces less than 3% of the nation's lumber, so that the only way we can keep our mills in steady operation is by pricing our products competitively and giving our customers the best possible service.
