A LITTLE girl's two most prized possessions, a doll and tea set, draw the attention of 16-month-old Christine Hayse, and 3-year-old Diane Thornton. This bit of pageantry was enacted at the J. C. Penney store.

Clever Designs Put Women's Watches in Class By Selves

NEW YORK — (NEA) — As a Christmas gift for a woman, a watch is bound to be treasured. And this is true even if she owns one watch now.

The reason for this is that in recent years, clever design has brought women's watches into a class all their own, one in which imagination and fashion play equal parts.

A few years ago, unlatching a door with a precision timepiece would have been out of the question. This year, it's reality.

In one of the new Swiss watch designs, a quality jeweled lever watch has an attached key blank ready for filing so that it will fit any prescribed lock. It may go into a handbag, or be attached to a chain by the tiny link since the dial is well protected by a raised crystal.

Then there's a unique, self-winding pocket watch that's slung with matching belt. The swinging motion of the reticule allows this watch to wind itself as the wearer walks. The watch also can be worn on a chain around the neck or in a suit pocket; the reticule slips off the belt and has a pin attachment to make it a lapel timepiece.

A precise and tiny watch has been fitted into a solid gold pencil that's ideal for handbag or desk. This, obviously, is the right gift for a secretary, a career woman or a traveler.

An hour-glass lapel watch for after-five wear has a one-minute supply of real sand that pours from one end of the glass container to the other and thus makes a conversation piece as well as a timepiece. It can be turned, on a swivel attached to the pin, for a repeat performance. Meanwhile, time's passing is marked accurately by the dial that's concealed in the top of the gold frame and protected by a raised crystal.

For the teen-ager, there's a watch suited for both classroom and party wear. It has a smart, square dial, a high crystal, a case in gold wire work and a hinged cover in gold grille work. It has, in short, everything a girl could want.

A second watch designed for after-five wear has a square platform crystal one-half inch high held in place by tiers of yellow gold set with sapphires.
