All of a sudden the air up around the Upper Lake seems to be extra full of huge bald eagles. No reason the county roads, the back lanes and the cutoffs.

For instance: The way the sugar and bull pine trees look so warm and summery when the sunlight hits them on a clear day even though they are jutting from a deep bank of snow—and the way they look so cool and shady and comfortable, like a draught of cold water, on a hot July or August day.

The sight of a beauty and the listands during December. Save the Islands during December.

One of the most missed symbols of ours during the cloudy months old Mount Shasta looming up to the South. The big mountain sems a part of the scene always, and when the clouds and snow blot out we find ourselves as if lost from all viewpoints, from abeer in dark reality on the cleared in district reality on the cleared in the mechanics, how they didn't have anything like that when he was a boy and ain't it cute?

There's a certain amount of incongruity in this high desert country of ours during the long winter months.

You'll notice "

The sight of a brand new and brightly painted bale elevator arching from the ground into a dusty, weather beaten old barn that may have been standing for fifty years or more.

The sight of a big, long haired old work horse pawing at the snow to uncover a few more mouthfuls of hay or winter grass almost in the shadow of a new and powerful tractor.

NEW YORK IF — How many people have asked you today— usually with a smirk:

"Well, what have you given up for the New Year?"

Behind the leering query lies the assumption on the part of the questioner that you are a fellow hypoterite.

He assumes that you, as well as he, made a pompous list of good resolutions — and that you both have already broken them. He recognizes in you a kindred soul, another broken reed.

The uncomfortable truth is — he probably is right. The high resolves made on New Year's morning often are forgotten by night-infall. Rarely do they endure a week. The reason for this is simple. What Joe doesn't realize is that he man of the house, Mr. Joseph Doakes, tries to reform his way of living.

He is sealed at a desk, He takes ou; a sheet of paper and writes on it;

"I hereby resolve to give up smoking."

Joe looks at that, smiles in smug viriue, and adds another line:
"I hereby resolve to quit being same," I hereby resolve to give being its to reflate it with a new habit.

Among them are 15 famous churches—some of them huge and some just parish meeting houses—standing again in the heart of London's sightseeing districts.

American, Canadian and European visitors at coronation time can't miss seeing at least two or three of the 15 if they do any sightseeing at fil. To distinguish restored churches or restored sections however, will be difficult. Restoration work looks almost exactly like the original masonry and carpentery of four and five centuries ago.

Several restoration projects eventually will cost far more than construction of the original buildings. In many instances, extensive live years of the campaign.
