becomes a predominant fuel. In coal areas, mechanical stokers afford heat that is just about as automatic as any kind. And in lumbering regions, even sawdust makes a fine low-cost fuel, although it calls for bulky storage and cumbersome handling.

An easy way to decide on the fuel you want to use is to check on what the majority of householders use in your community. If it's oil, there must be a reason for it.

To be more scientific about it, check up on the local cost of various fuels. Each fuel has a known heat producing efficiency measured in British Thermal Units (BTUs). The figures sound big, but they're easy to understand. They make it possible for you to compare the amount of heat you'll get out of each dollar.

FRESH PEARS

Comice and Nellis pears are tempting winter fruits. The Comice are giant-sized this year, green with a lovely bluish of red. The Nellis are smaller than the Comice and have their characteristic russet-colored skin which becomes flecked with gold when the fruit is eating ripe. Each variety of pear is tender, sweet, juicy and completely delicious.
