State Mansion, School Bill Up for Legislative Study

By PAUL W. HARVEY JR.

SALEM (AP) — Oregon's governor, possibly the only governor in the United States who lives in an apartment house, will get a $100,000 mansion if the Oregon Legislature passes a bill introduced by Sen. Jack Bain, Portland Democrat.

Introduction of the bill was another case where the small Democratic legislative minority beat the Republicans to the punch. However, the Democrats have sponsored similar legislation for years.

The last official act of ex-Gov. Douglas McKay, who quit Dec. 17 to become secretary of the interior and who turned his office over to Gov. Paul L. Patterson, was to join other members of the Board of Control in urging that the Legislature provide a governor's mansion.

Bain's bill would direct the Board of Control to build it. But before the board could spend the money, it would have to get permission from the State Emergency Board, which is a legislative committee that makes appropriations between legislative sessions.

Both houses scheduled a joint meeting for 3 p.m. Thursday to hear the state's financial experts tell them about the state's money outlook for the next two years.

The Senate Education Committee announced it would begin immediately the difficult job of trying to draft school reorganization legislation that the people would accept.

The 1951 Legislature passed a school bill to make it easier to consolidate school districts. However, the state Grange and smallest school districts, fearing that the small districts would be forced into consolidated districts, got it referred to the people. The voters killed it last November by a narrow margin.

Sen. Robert D. Holmes, Gearhart, chairman of the committee, said the committee would study the 1951 bill, hoping it could be changed so the people would accept it.

Sen. John P. Hounsell, Hood River, said he would sponsor a proposed constitutional amendment to make it harder to get initiative and referendum measures on the ballot.

Now, the number of signatures required to get them on the ballot is 8 per cent for initiatives and 5 per cent for referenda, the percentage being based on the vote for state Supreme Court justice at the preceding general election. The signatures now can be obtained anywhere in the state.

Hounsell's measure would base the percentage on the vote cast for governor. This would require many more signatures, because fewer people vote for Supreme Court justices, who almost always are unopposed.

Based on 1950 election figures, the initiative requirements for the ballot would be boosted from about 26,000 names to 40,000.

The measure also would require that the percentage needed must be maintained in three of the four congressional districts. Thus it would prevent sponsors of a measure from getting their names in only a small segment of the state. 7A similar measure was passed by the House in 1951, but it died in the Senate. It is backed strongly by Eastern Oregon legislators, who claim that Portland voters put too many measures on the ballot.

Legion Time Brings Trial

GENEVA (AP)—Switzerland, once the supplier of the best mercenary soldiers in Europe, now claps into prison any of her sons who return from service in the French Foreign Legion or other foreign armies.

Back in the 18th century Swiss mercenaries were famed for their fighting qualities and eagerly sought by Europe's warring nations. The Swiss Army has not fought a war for nearly a century and a half now, but the old skills are still there and every year more than 300 Swiss sign up for five years in the French Foreign Legion.

A number of returning legionnaires are now on trial in a Zurich military court. One of the former legionnaires testified that in his brigade in Indochina one-sixth of the soldiers were Swiss and most of the rest German.

Although Swiss law specifically prohibits foreign military service, the same court tried approximately 50 such cases last year. Federal police say that at least 300 Swiss enter the legion every year and almost all of them are sent to Indochina.
