

WALL STREET

NEW YORK (U) — It was quiet Monday in the stock market with prices moving in a narrowly higher range.

Small fractional changes were the rule, and there was considerable see-sawing of prices throughout the day.

Volume came to an estimated 1,600,000 shares. That compares with 1,680,000 shares traded Friday.

The market action was right in line with the tempo and character of the two previous sessions. Basically there is an air of caution in Wall Street coming from the Russian situation, but there seems to be no leaning toward hasty pessimism.

Crater Snow 114 Inches

Snow depth at Crater Lake National Park stood at 114 inches this morning, said Chief Ranger Bernice Packard reported, and that's two inches below where it stood last Friday.

A year ago today the snow depth stood at 190 inches at the park.

Skiing conditions were reported good over the weekend, Packard said, with a little wet snow reported in the heat of the afternoons. The weather was clear and warm.

A total of 254 automobiles brought in 929 people through the park gates over the weekend. Of that number 83 persons were skiers.

Packard reported travel on all the open park roads — including the South and West entrances — is fine without chains.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO (U) — A little flicker of steadiness at the opening was soon doused under expanding selling pressure in grains on the Board of Trade Monday.

Only wheat showed an easier trend at the opening, but everything was down at the finish. The selling in wheat reflected receipt of more moisture in parts of the Southwest over the weekend.

Wheat closed 1/4-1/2 lower, March $2.23 1/2-2.24, corn 1/4-1/2 lower, March $1.54 1/2, oats 1/4-1/2 to 2 cents lower, March 72 1/2-73, rye 3/4 to 4 cents lower, May $1.76 1/2, soybeans 1/2-2/4 lower, March $2.96-2.98 1/2, and lard 20 to 45 cents a hundred pounds higher at $10.35.

Stalin Joins Lenin In Moscow Tomb

changes — every 15 minutes.

The slus, slus, slus from their booted feet is the only sound in the spacious distances of Red Square.

Faintly in the distance comes the sound of music. It is the stately and awesome Chopin Funeral March.

The music swells. Up the slight hill into Red Square there comes a procession from the Hall of Columns.

The soldiers turn eyes right. The big band before the Tomb joins in the dirge-like music which now fills the huge square.

Only wheat showed an easier trend at the opening, but everything was down at the finish. The selling in wheat reflected receipt of more moisture in parts of the Southwest over the weekend.

Wheat closed 1/4-1/2 lower, March $2.23 1/2-2.24, corn 1/4-1/2 lower, March $1.54 1/2, oats 1/4-1/2 to 2 cents lower, March 72 1/2-73, rye 3/4 to 4 cents lower, May $1.76 1/2, soybeans 1/2-2/4 lower, March $2.96-2.98 1/2, and lard 20 to 45 cents a hundred pounds higher at $10.35.

First in line are the masses of flowers. Wreaths 10 feet high. Banks of flowers entwined in palm leaves and evergreens. They are so big and heavy no single person can support them.

It looks like a moving field of spring's first blossoms. Great flashes and splashes of blue, purple, white, red, and fluttering from them, the crimson, black-bordered pennants of mourning.

Now I look to the left. Here is Marshal Semion Budenny walking very slowly in time to the music. Before him he carries a red silk pillow. On it lies a medal — one of Stalin's.

Two abreast behind Budenny march other military leaders.

Just behind them comes a single soldier on a black horse. Behind him, eight horses — just as black — pull a gun carriage. On it lies the coffin of Stalin.

The coffin is covered in crimson cloth but through a rounded section of glass you can see the features of the fallen leader.

Just behind the gun carriage and its coffin walk Stalin's closest friends and companions.

You can recognize them all, those familiar faces. Just behind the gun carriage is one row.

The bands have shifted slowly into another tune. It is something by Rimsky-Korsakoff, great Russian composer of the last century.

Behind the Soviet and party leaders there come the foreign guests. One can recognize so many of them, we are that close. They are just a few feet from us. The tomb is about 50 feet to the right.

The procession halts before the white, cloth-covered platform.

Gently — ever so gently — Stalin's companions lift his coffin off the gun carriage. They handle it so tenderly. Very, very slowly they set it down.

Next in the procession are the leaders of Moscow's diplomatic missions — tall, thin Jacob Beam, American charge d'affaires; silk-bellied Sir Alvaro Gascoigne of Britain; Mario Di Stefano, the Italian ambassador in formal clothes and a top hat; Argentine ambassador Dr. Leopoldo Bravo; French ambassador Louis Joxe.

At 10:58 an announcer introduces Georgi Malenkov.

Malenkov has a vibrant voice. He speaks without hesitating in clear strong tones. Loud speakers bring his every word to the thousands in Red Square and the millions in Moscow.

The radio takes his voice to every corner of this broad land, and by short wave to the countries of the world.

Malenkov never hesitates. He speaks out over the crowd. Every eye is on him. He finishes promptly at 11:15.

There is the slightest of pauses.

The announcer presents Lavrenti Beria. He starts out in strong measured tones.

Molotov is introduced.

The foreign minister begins, and grief-stricken, his voice almost breaks. He goes on.

At 11:55 Molotov has said what he had to say.

There is a pause.

Movement on the tribunal. Malenkov leads the procession back down the marble steps and out in front of the Kremlin. The bands begin to play again the Funeral March of Chopin. The chimes on Spassky ring out high noon.

Softly at first and then louder and louder go the whistles of the factories of Moscow, and the whistles on boats in the nearby channels cut in the ice.

The cannons fling their fiery volleys into the March sky. The clock rings out the last strokes of 12.

The whistles are very much louder. The chimes, Chopin, roaring guns and whistles — Stalin's requiem.

FINAL SHOT

At precisely five minutes past noon the last cannon sounds its 30th shot.

It is strangely silent again.

Then there is a slight movement in the massed bands. Trumpets to a hundred lips. A great blast over the Square. The first note of the Soviet Hymn.

Hats come off. The party and government leaders come to salute. With the last notes of the hymn, I look back over my shoulder at the Kremlin. The Red flag of state which has stood at half staff since Stalin's death is slowly rising. Two men pull it to the top.

DIPLOMATS

TO TOMB

They take it up and move off toward the wide-open metal doors of the tomb.

It is 11:58. The first gun roars over the Kremlin — the beginning of the salute. The bands begin to play again the Funeral March of Chopin. The chimes on Spassky ring out high noon.

Softly at first and then louder and louder go the whistles of the factories of Moscow, and the whistles on boats in the nearby channels cut in the ice.
