

K.F. Woman Takes Jaunt Inauguration

By Mrs. W. P. Myers

Seats of honor on the President's platform were occupied by congressional leaders, members of the new cabinet, inaugural officials and invited guests, including ex-President Hoover and the families of President Truman, General Eisenhower, Vice President Barkley and Vice President-elect Nixon. It was a momentous and unique occasion, with three Presidents on the platform, Truman, Eisenhower and Hoover. When ex-President Hoover appeared, he was received with a burst of cheers from the vast audience. After twenty years, he, like the Republican party, has come back into his own.

At 12:10 p.m., the Marine Band played "Hail to the Chief" as President Truman walked across the platform and took his place at the right of the rostrum. Only a smattering of applause greeted him, which was regrettable as this was his last appearance as President and the last time the Marine Band would play "Hail to the Chief" for him.

General Eisenhower and Senator Nixon appeared on the platform as the Marine Band played "Stars and Stripes Forever." They were greeted with prolonged and rousing applause. Then Senator Nixon and Senator Knowland of California stepped forward and Senator Knowland administered the oath of office of the vice president to Senator Nixon. Thus we had a new vice president first, then a flourish by the band as General Eisenhower stepped to the rostrum, with Chief Justice Vinson, who at 12:32 p.m. administered the oath of office which made General Eisenhower the thirty-fourth president of the United States.

Each state was represented in the parade: the Governor and his family, riding in an official car bearing his name and the state, proceeded the float, which usually depicted some outstanding industry or characteristic of the state. The float for Ohio, which took prize, was in the form of a galleon. Miss America sat on a throne surrounded by paper-mache copies of citrus fruit, and bearing the inscription: "Where Summer spends the Winter." In the bow of the boat was a figure representing Peace, the figure holding the Fountain of Youth. A gold cup, suitably inscribed, will go to the State officials.

Many of the floats combined early American history with modern achievement. New Jersey showed Washington crossing the Delaware; Connecticut, the "Spirit of '76"; Maryland's float, Barbara Fritchie stood beside a giant satin flag. The Texas float, bearing young boys in big hats and high boots, announced in large gold letters that they were "Texas Democrats for Eisenhower." It was hailed with glee by the by-partisan audience. The Ohio float brought delight to the children. One of its exhibits was Miss Burma, the elephant, mascot of the G.O.P., wearing a new blanket bearing the name of Mr. Republican. Ohio is the home state of Senator Taft. Kansas still holds to their sunflowers. When the Kansas delegation appeared with their big sunflower bouquets, a by-stander said: "What do you know? They are still wearing Landow suits."

The high point of the parade was a ten float procession illustrating the life of the General. It was preceded by a jeep carrying a huge open book, entitled "The Life of President Eisenhower." The first float was: Texas salutes the nation. It contained a scale model of the home where he was born, in Dennison, Texas, a Texas map and the flags under which Texas has been governed. Child actors impersonated the childhood and boyhood life of Eisenhower. Kansas took up the history when the parade passed to Abilene, where the story covered his West Point period and marriage to Mamie, July 1, 1916, when he also became a First Lieutenant in the Army; also military life. The parade then passed to California, where the story covered the California years, the marriage to Mamie, July 1, 1916, when he also became a First Lieutenant in the Army; also military life. The parade then passed to California, where the story covered the California years, the marriage to Mamie, July 1, 1916, when he also became a First Lieutenant in the Army; also military life.

Immediately after his inauguration, President Eisenhower sent the names of eight members of his Cabinet to the Senate for confirmation. Senator Morse blocked confirmation until the next day when the Senate could take a vote on the confirmation, which they did and passed it with only one dissenting vote—that of Sen. Morse. The Washington Evening Star, in commenting on Senator Morse's attitude, called it "a petty triumph over there in a petty triumph." A president can get by for twenty-four hours without a Cabinet if he has to. So Senator Morse really has accomplished nothing beyond a demonstration of small-gage statesmanship.

On seats for the parade were on the north side of Pennsylvania Avenue, between 17th and Jackson Place, Box B, Row 3, and on the street level. After the parade started, a lady wearing a Washington hostess badge traded seats with me. She was very gracious and staid. She was taller than I. She could better look over the heads of the two rows in front. So I occupied the choice front corner seat in our box.

President stood and waved happily to this by-partisan crowd, whose cheers said: "We are for you, Ike."

BIG NOISE

A twenty-one gun salute started the parade. The Marine Band came first, closely followed by President Eisenhower's white convertible, then Vice President Nixon and Mrs. Nixon, who were also greeted with much hand clapping and cheers of good will. Both Mrs. Eisenhower and Mrs. Nixon rode beside their famous husbands instead of taking a place farther back in the parade line as former President's wives have done. They had campaigned at their husbands' sides to win the election and were invited to this glorious moment of riding down Pennsylvania Avenue.

After passing down the entire line of march so as to greet all the spectators, President Eisenhower and official party returned to the Presidential Reviewing Stand, from which they watched the parade, until the sun went down and the moon came up over the Capitol where the Stars and Stripes keep vigil day and night.

Like a kaleidoscope, the changing scenes passed before us so rapidly that we could not take in everything. After the massed colors of the States and Territories, came the members of the Cabinet in official cars bearing their names and positions. Secretary of the Interior—our own ex-Governor McKay—and his wife got a big hand, all along the line of march. Everyone seemed to know he was from Oregon.

BOYS AND GIRLS learn to work in groups, learn skills and attitudes, essential to the successful adjustment of each child before enrollment in the first grade during the hours they attend classes in kindergarten. These happy youngsters work from 9 to 11:30 a. m. each day in a bright, clean room decorated with their own handiwork in the Merrill Recreation building. Each child pays $10 per month to help defray salary of the teacher. All other expenses are paid by the VFW auxiliary. The city charges $20 per month for the room and furnishes heat. Mrs. Robert Merrilees and Mrs. Ralph W. Swisher are co-chairmen of the VFW auxiliary project this year, second that the kindergarten has been operated. A new record player was given this year by the Merrill, VFW post, and interested persons have donated books and equipment.

STORY TELLING TIME in the Merrill kindergarten, sponsored by the Merrill VFW auxiliary is the best time of day here. Mrs. Oren Storey, rated by educators to be one of the best kindergarten teachers in Oregon, tells a "fascinatin' tale" to Janice Hodges, Nancy Harris, Shirley Swisher, Robert Waldrip, Audrey Cunningham, Trudy Lehr, Peggy Carter, Karen Van, Eric Haskins, Virginia Patterson, Nita Payzant, Robert Merrilees, Jim Bob Merrilees, Sheryl Smith, Rocky Lisky, Larry Conner and David Schultz. Absent the day the photographer arrived were Rocky Hodges, Charles Cahen and Delores Wolfram. Children will have a picnic before the end of school, May 29. All activities and dates conform to the regular Oregon State educational requirements. Mrs. Robert Walker, Merrill, is president of the sponsoring auxiliary, Mrs. Marie Vacknitz, Malin, is district president of the VFW auxiliary.

Today's Women

TODAY'S WOMEN
By Dorothy Roe

Wanted: young woman who can conduct intelligent conversation, to meet one of America's most eligible bachelors. Object, matrimony.

Wally Cox, the mild-mannered phenomenon who has skyrocketed to fame and fortune as TV's "Mr. Peepers," is 27, quiet appealing, rich, successful and lonely.

He is eager to get married, loves children, wants a home, is prepared to support a wife in a manner to which few modern girls are accustomed—but he can't find the girl.

Each week night he dates a different girl, and on Sundays he tries to meet several new ones in a group. Result—disappointment.

But does Wally give up? Gracious, no. With each wrong guess, isn't that he doesn't know any girls—he is acquainted with hundreds of them. But he remarks "Somewhere there must be a girl who thinks, and expresses her thoughts. It's really not hard to find. Most people just don't. Here are Wally's specifications

Sabres Credited With MIG Kills

SEOUL (AP)—The U. S. Air Force Wednesday reported 692 Russian built MIG-15 jet fighters have been destroyed in the Korean War.

All but 17 were credited to Sabre jets.

And Sabres were credited with more than 90 per cent of the 126 MIGs probably destroyed and 869 damaged.

The air force said 5 Sabres had been lost in combat with MIGs. Why that 67-55 superiority?

Lt. Gen. Glenn O. Barcus, soon to retire as Fifth Air Force commander, says:

"1. The Sabre is a better plane than the MIG.

"2. Americans are better pilots than the enemy."

Most American pilots agree on both points.

Big Springs Board Meets

BONANZA—The Bonanza Big Springs Park Association met at the Variety Store Wednesday evening for their regular meeting.

President Roy Warfield was in charge of the meeting. Officers were re-elected with Warfield the president, Lloyd Hankins, vice-president, Lewis Van Sipe, director. The Hoefler family and Don Hubble made donations toward playground equipment. The Oliver Haley's donated steel for tops of the fireplaces, and the Cecil Haley's donated a table. Four little boys from Langell Valley took the money from their "Fifty Bank" to buy a table. The little boys are Mike, Dan, David and Steve Gralian, sons of the Eddie Gralians.

The Park Committee plans a dance sometime this summer to raise additional funds. It will probably be a pie social and square dance with the Neal Jones' and Miggs Burks' in charge.
