Argentina May OK US News Outlet

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — The Argentine government has cleared the way for U. S. news agencies to again distribute news in Argentina. It announced Tuesday night reinstatement of permits for the Associated Press and United Press to operate their own communication stations. There was no indication, however, whether the Argentine newspapers would resume use of American agency dispatches. Such items disappeared from the newspapers after the Peron government began a campaign against the agencies earlier this month. The communication stations receive news of the rest of the world via radio teletype. The permits for their operation had been suspended May 12 after the government barred American agencies from distributing news within the country. The ban also affected a third U. S. agency, the International News Service, which does not operate its own station. There was no explanation either of the original suspension order or of Tuesday night's decision to reinstate the agencies' permits. The lifting of the ban coincided with an end of newspaper attacks on the agencies and the U. S. State Department. These attacks have been continuous since President Peron, in a May Day speech opening Congress, accused the agencies of conducting a campaign to defame him abroad. He also charged them with accepting orders from the U. S. State Department. At Peron's request, the Congress appointed a nine-member commission to investigate the president's charges. Tuesday the commission authorized its president and secretary to act for the group pending start of the probe.

Iran Extends AP Permit

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Marc Purdue, Associated Press correspondent in Iran, received notice Wednesday that he may remain here another month.

Tuesday the government ordered the reporter expelled within three days, saying he had dispatched "false and provocative news against the interests of Iran." Hossein Fatemi, foreign minister, told Purdue he had reported "events of no consequence which were harmful to Iranian-American relations."

Fatemi expressed belief that attacks on Americans which have taken place recently were not worthy of news coverage. He asserted such incidents are not reported from other countries where they occur.

Purdue, from Evansville, Ind., has been in the AP's foreign service since 1945. He came to Iran last September.

Forest Guard Set To Take To Woods In Annual Battle To "Keep Oregon Green"

By PAUL W. HARVEY JR.

SALEM (AP) — A thousand men, women and girls, backed by more than 25,000 loggers, soon will be taking to the woods in the annual effort to maintain Oregon's proud record of forest fire suppression. They will work for the State Forestry Department and district fire patrol associations. They will guard and fight fire on 12 million acres of state and private lands, plus 2,500,000 acres of O & C federal lands in Southern Oregon.

The federal forestry experts say it's good forest management when fires burn less than 1/2 of 1 per cent of the forest land a year. Oregon did not better that last year, when 22,278 acres were burned, or less than 1-6 of 1 per cent of the total.

The cost of this huge job of saving the state's forests is paid by the logging operators through assessments against their land. Soon, as the result of a 1953 law, there will be a $750,000 state emergency forest fire fighting fund, and the logging operators will maintain this fund through a severance tax on timber.

Oregon is divided into 15 fire patrol districts. Nine of them are association districts, which are operated by associations of logging operators. The other six are State Forestry Department districts. The districts have almost 100 year-round men, who fight fires in the summer, and spend the rest of the year maintaining equipment.

About 800 employees are hired during the fire season, including personnel for fire fighting crews, each, located in each of the 15 districts. On top of this, there always are 60 to 100 men available in the Salem headquarters—men who are chained to desks, but who have to go out on emergency fire fighting duty. In the Tillamook Burn, which is being replanted, there are 60 convicts available for fire duty. They are in the prison work camp, and their main job is to plant trees and cut down snags. State forestry personnel in the burn, who are building fire corridors, also are available to fight fires.

State Foresters say the girls make the best spotters. They make better reports than men. But they can't put out the little fires like a man does, and they require more service, such as hauling wood and supplies to them.

The best lookouts are the husband and wife teams, because the husband can go off to fight a little fire while his wife stays to watch for other fires.

The state lookout towers are easily accessible, except for three or four of them. Almost all of them can be reached by automobile. The lookouts in the national forests usually have to hike a few miles to get to their posts, but that's because the national forests are in much more rugged country than the state and private forests.

State lookouts get starting pay of $210 a month. That isn't bad pay, because a lookout saves all of his money. Lookouts find it a pleasant way to spend a summer, too. The lookouts will begin going to their posts when the first dry weather comes. All of the towers will be manned by July 1. The state maintains two 20-man fire fighting crews at Corvallis, and in the Camas Valley of Douglas County. There also are 380 men, split into crews of five to 10 men

Big Race

SEATTLE (AP) — All three of the University of Washington crews that won decisively over California here last Saturday are ticketed for a trip to the national races at Lake Okauchee, N. Y., June 20. The faculty athletic committee voted Tuesday to send the freshman oarsmen along with the varsity and junior varsity western championship eights.
