

Planes Readied To Take To Air In Fifth Year Of War On Spruce Budworms

Oregon's aerial war against the tree destroying spruce budworm will enter its fifth year shortly after June 15, when the state forestry department undertakes spraying of 273,000 acres of the pest infested timberlands in Eastern Oregon.

John B. Woods Jr., assistant state forester, who has pioneered the fight against the needle chewing insect since it attained epidemic status in 1948, announced that 292,000 gallons of DDT insecticide and three aircraft spraying companies would be committed to the project. This year should end major budworm infestation in the Blue Mountains, according to the forester.

A base headquarters for the project will be established at Starkey, Ore., which will serve as a control and dispatching center for all spraying operations. Both radio and telephone communications will be maintained between all sub-headquarters, field crews, airfields and weather stations.

Jack Whitehead of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, Portland, has been named technical director of the project. Whitehead will make decisions relative to timing and sequence of spraying applications and will also conduct field tests to determine insect mortality following application of the spray.

Woods stated that the infested area had been divided into three tracts for operational activities. (1) Johnson Creek unit of 99,754 acres, near Meacham, will be supervised by Denver McComb. 105,464 gallons of insecticide have been allotted for this area. The Leo John Demers Aircraft Company, of Salem, will spray this unit. Two B-17's, 2 basic single engine airplanes and 2 standby used on this project.

(2) Starkey unit of 124,124 acres, southwest of Starkey, will be supervised by Jack Gartz. Insecticide allotment for this area is 131,254 gallons. The Northwest Agricultural Aviation Corporation of Chateau, Mont., will use two Ford Tri-motor airplanes; one TBM; one Cessna T-40 and two basic single engine airplanes.

(3) The Dale unit, east of Dale, of 52,288 acres, will also be supervised by Gartz. 55,232 gallons of insecticide will be used. The Combs West-Air Company of Yakima, Wash., will provide three aircraft for this project.

Forestry Pilot Albert Larson, will supervise the flying operations, and has announced that all aircraft will use the airstrips at La Grande, Meacham and Starkey. The Civil Aeronautics Administration has appointed a project staff to assist in the enforcement of safety regulations.

Spray control is exercised by means of an aerial mosaic map, indicating the infested areas and strips to be treated with insecticide. All timber land owners having infested lands have been contacted. Cost of spraying is estimated to be approximately 98 cents per acre. Costs are divided upon basis of 37 1/2 per cent paid by the timber owners; 37 1/2 per cent by the state of Oregon and remaining 25 per cent by the federal government. Owners of non-commercial forest lands are not assessed spraying costs.

On state, county and municipal timber lands, the state of Oregon pays the entire cost of treating the infestation. The federal government pays 100 per cent of the spray costs on all federal owned forest lands.

Major portion of the land to be treated is owned by the federal government. 241,000 acres of the infested forest lands to be treated this spring are owned by the federal government. Of the remainder, 12,647 acres are owned by the state, county or local cities and 21,479 acres are in private ownership.

Woods said that spray applications would normally be made from 100 to 250 feet above tree top level at a rate of one gallon per acre, lying usually begins at daylight and continues until wind and atmospheric conditions reduce the effectiveness of the DDT. Special precautions will be taken to prevent spray from drifting onto crops and orchards located in the timber tracts.

Woods will be assisted in the giant spray program by Miles Compton, who will operate the headquarters at Starkey. Denver McComb and Jack Gartz, have been assigned as project supervisors.
