Enlisted Scientists Give Army Technical Brains It Cannot Buy

By DOUGLAS LARSEN
NEA Staff Correspondent

ARMY CHEMICAL CENTER, EDgewood, Md.—(NEA)—The U. S. Army has at last found a way to put square pegs in square holes. Several thousand, anyway.

And the results are turning out fine, although with a few disconcerting twists.

For instance the other day a frantic phone call from the Pentagon ordered the officer-in-charge of some super-secret laboratory project at Edgewood sent to Washington pronto to appear before a Senate committee.

The colonel at this end of the line stammered a little and finally had to admit to the Pentagon general that the man in charge of said program was a private first class—an "SPP."

The upshot was that a colonel appeared before the Senate committee, but with the private at his elbow to whisper the answers into his ear.

The SPPs are a group of very brainy young enlisted men known officially as Scientific and Professional personnel.

As of now, to qualify for an SPP job, you've got to have a masters degree in some science or two years of job experience in a scientific field. When the program first got under way more than a year ago, an ordinary degree was good enough. And with the present crop of double domes getting lighter, they may drop the bar back down a degree.

Here's the way the program works: A few weeks after basic training starts, draftees with real scientific savvy, are given the chance to ask for SPP duty. That means a shortened basic course and quick assignment to one of the Army's many research and development outfits.

It also means no chance to become an officer, a very difficult course even to get an enlisted promotion, and no chance to win medals or overseas ribbons.

In exchange, however, the SPP gets to spend his period of service in his own field of scientific work and gets out of the Army with valuable experience under his belt. The Army may lose a good general duty officer and field leadership material but it gets the use of a lot of scientific brainpower which it can't buy on the civilian market today.

There are close to 1000 of these master-minds in the current Chemical Corps SPP program, the biggest one in the Army. They hold down key jobs in the labs and get all kinds of complicated, technical assignments.

One officer estimates that the SPPs do close to one-third of all the scientific and technical work accomplished here. The work they do is so important the details of it are classified.

That doesn't keep Pvt. Paul O. Nielsen of Detroit from speaking out on what he thinks about the program, however.

"I must admit that I was skeptical about the idea at first," he says, "having heard so much about Army methods. But it has really amazed me how well the thing works. My job has been a constant challenge to me. I've learned more than I think I could have in private industry, in fact. And I think I've been able to make a real contribution to the project I'm on."

Nielsen, according to his commanding officer, is a brilliant chemical engineer. He was graduated from the University of Michigan last year and worked for an oil company while finishing his graduate studies before he was drafted.

The SPPs have their own club and they constitute most of the GI force on this large base. There's no guard house because there's no discipline problem.

Their club bridge team is rated the best in the East. They've set up a job-placement office, which is constantly hounded by personnel officials from the biggest corporations.

And they've started a scholarship fund to send the outstanding high school graduate of adjoining Hartford County to college.

About one-third of the present SPP crop has indicated a desire to stay on here as civilian scientists after they get out of service. All of them have had several offers of good jobs in private industry when they get out.

Since the Army started the program more than a year ago, 11,000 SPPs have participated. "It would be hard to overestimate the tremendous contribution these men have made to our research and development program," says Lt. Col. Walter W. Kuehler, head of one of the labs. The same sentiment is echoed by everyone who has had anything to do with the SPP program.

Oh, Love A Duck! Dog Goes Walking With A Big Quack

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)—This is the sad story of a homeless dog with a mental twist.

His odd love life at Lincoln Park here makes him a candidate for a dog-psychiatrist. He's been lavishing his attentions on a duck and it's led to talk.

But don't be too harsh on the part-collie. He's repressed—had no chance to lead a normal dog's life.

Right after he started panhandling meals from park picnickers, the kids named him Salome. More insults—they dressed him up in their clothes while they swam in the park pool. Now what self-respecting canine girl would look twice at a character done up like that?

His neurosis grew and he found solace with this duck dame. So each morning when the duck flock leaves the park pond for a stroll, neurotic Salome comes rushing in. He scatters and snaps at all the ducks—except this one big quack. Then he saunters through the park with her waddling along beside. After spending the day exploring lovers' lane, Salome returns his girl friend to the flock while he goes on the bum again for handouts at the picnic tables.

Klamath Council Faces Six Items

KLAMATH AGENCY—Six items are on the agenda for a Klamath General Council session scheduled here Thursday, 10 a.m.

The subjects are: Budget, Loan Board for fiscal year 1954; and administration, for fiscal year 1955; election of one board member; report on proposed medical plan; report on proposed law and order code; permission for tribal member to build cabin on tribal land.

PRINCESS WEDS

PORTLAND (AP)—Betty Llanes, Girls Polytechnic High School princess in the recent Rose Festival, is a bride.

She became the wife of Gerald E. DeBeau, 22, in a civil ceremony Saturday.

Reed Further Blocks Tax

WASHINGTON (AP)—Rebellious Rep. Daniel A. Reed threw up a new barrier today in his blockade against the Eisenhower administration's drive to extend the excess profits tax.

The veteran New York Republican simply called off all meetings of the House Ways and Means Committee, which he heads, until further notice. Hearings on tax revision had been scheduled weeks ago for today and tomorrow.

Reed already has refused to convene his committee specifically for a vote on the profits tax extension.

There was speculation among congressmen that his new maneuver had stopped dead in its tracks any plan by House Republican leaders to circumvent the chairman and start some surprise session from the committee ranks during a meeting called on other matters.

National Forest Sales Announced

Supervisor John E. McDonald, Fremont National Forest, has announced the recent sale of 58,200,000 board feet of timber in two separate tracts.

The first sale, consisting of 11,400,000 board feet of ponderosa pine and 2,100,000 board feet of fir, is located in the Green Creek area on the Paisley Ranger District. This timber was sold to the Adams Lumber Company at the appraised prices of $20.85 per thousand for ponderosa pine, and $2.00 per thousand board feet for the fir.

The second tract containing 46,800,000 board feet of pine and 4,700,000 board feet of fir, is situated in the Strawberry Mountain and Castle Rock area on the Drews Valley Ranger District. White Pine Lumber Company was awarded this sale at the appraised prices of $35.20 per thousand board feet for pine and $3.80 for the fir.

Both of these sales are within the Lakeview Federal Sustained Yield Unit and timber harvested from them will be manufactured under unit terms.

Portland Food Prices Rising

PORTLAND (AP)—Portland food prices rose four tenths of one percent from April 15 to May 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported Tuesday.

The index at 113.4, was 2.9 percent lower than a year ago. Among foods showing increases were: pork and bacon, up 8 percent, oranges, apples and lettuce, up 10 to 12 percent. Higher prices also were reported for rice, shortening, sugar and salad dressing, potatoes 17 per cent.

Coffee was down 3 percent and Dairy products and eggs were unchanged.

gram more than a year ago, 11,000 SPPs have participated. "It would be hard to overestimate the tremendous contribution these men have made to our research and development program," says Lt. Col. Walter W. Kuehler, head of one of the labs. The same sentiment is echoed by everyone who has had anything to do with the SPP program.
