WARDS WINS FREIGHT SUIT
 PORTLAND (AP)—A federal judge ruled Tuesday against B4 railroad and trucking companies in a three-million dollar damage suit filed against them nearly 11 years ago by Montgomery Ward & Co.
 Judge James A. Fee held them liable for losses suffered by the mail order firm during a six-month strike of AFL clerks and warehousemen. The strike started Dec. 7, 1940, and closed the Ward store here nearly three months.
 The suit was filed Dec. 3, 1942, Ward estimating its losses at about $2,800,000. Trial was delayed until June, 1951, because of legal conferences.
 Defendants included the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific, and Spokane, Portland and Seattle railroads; Railway Express Agency Northern Pacific Terminal Co. of Oregon, Consolidated Freightways and United Truck Lines.
 Ward charged the carriers with failing to provide its store with transportation during the strike, when carriers' employees refused to cross picket lines.
 Judge Fee found that "motor carriers joined hands with union leaders" to deny the store transportation.
 He held, "It was the duty of the carriers to stand a strike or surrender their operating franchises before joining in a conspiracy to destroy a business house with which they had no quarrel."
 The judge said the carriers should compensate Ward for its losses because they "violated their obligations by boycotting Ward's, cutting it off from access to the facilities of commerce in order to stay in business themselves."
 Fee called the government's attitude during the strike "shocking." He said members of the executive department "co-operated with the union leaders in an attempt to destroy an independent business house."

'Off We Go Into The Wide Space Yonder' Film Theme

By BOB THOMAS
HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Off we go into the wild space yonder...
 That theme song may not be far off, according to experts who are working on a film about space flight. One of them is Dr. Konrad Butner, scientist who researched the effect of heat and cold on pilots for Germany during the war. Now a researcher at UCLA on the human aspects of space travel, he comments:
 "The advent of space travel is only a matter of how much money we want to spend to achieve it. The principles are established; now it is strictly a matter of dollars and engineering. Space travel stands at the same place where the atom bomb was in 1940. Scientists know it can be one."
 Dr. Butner has been advising on the technical aspects of "Riders to the Stars," which producer Ivan Tors calls a science picture. Not science fiction, mind you. He claims it's for real.
 The story concerns the search for personnel to ride a space ship 150 miles up to capture a meteor in its native state. The idea is to learn why rockets crystallize above certain altitudes.
 "The selection of personnel to travel in space flight will be a major task," assured Dr. Butner. "They must be smaller than average in weight and size, but not too small so that they might have inferiority complexes. They must be around 25—fully matured but not yet declining physically. They must be pilots and have a college background, preferably in astro-physics and engineering."
 "They must also have high moral aspects. They will have to possess well-balanced personalities and be willing to risk their lives for the benefit of mankind."
 Curt Siodmak, who wrote the picture, offers the notion that women might be the first space travelers. He points out that women would be smaller, weigh less, require less food and have a better nature for withstanding the boredom of remaining in space for extended periods. Dr. Butner said it was a possibility.
 He added that the establishment of space stations, or artificial satellites, is actually more important to humanity than reaching Mars, the moon or other planets. The latter would largely serve to satisfy human curiosity, he said.
 "But the construction of an artificial satellite would have a profound effect on the earth. Not only would it be a means of assuring travel to other planets; it would also be a valuable military weapon. The sending of rockets to enemy countries could be done with accuracy. There is virtually no countermeasure for such a weapon."
 "It would be a means for insuring peace."

Fort Klamath To Enter Float

FORT KLAMATH—Enthusiasm keyed the meeting held Thursday evening, June 25th, in the C. I. clubhouse here, when a committee of Civic Improvement Club members and representatives of the Fort Klamath Business Association gathered to discuss feasibility of entering a community float in the Klamath Falls rodeo Fourth of July parade to be held there 10 a.m. Saturday.
 As a result of the discussion, Fort Klamath will definitely have a float in the parade. General chairman of the project is Mrs. Harold L. (Myrtle) Wimer, with the following committee: Mrs. Elizabeth M. Loosley, representing the Fort Klamath Business Association, and Mrs. Loren L. Miller Sr., to act for the C. I. Club. On the work detail are Edward (Bud) Strong and Lefty Wild Eagle Wilder, from the community at large.
 Although sponsored jointly by the two local groups the float will be financed entirely by members of the Business Association. Citizens of our small community are showing fine cooperation in the venture, in spite of the fact that at this season of the year, Fort Klamath is a veritable beehive of activity—cattlemen are busy with ranch work, loggers are working in woods operations and business people are busy indeed, catering to the numerous travelers stopping here each week, going to and from Crater Lake, major scenic attraction of this locality.
 Theme of the float will be the passage of years from the early days of Wood River valley to the present time, with characters to be portrayed by several local people, and details are being worked out by the committee in charge.

Housewife in Congress Going After Dirty Food

By PATTI SIMMONS
NEA Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON (INEA)—A bottle cap in a creamery strainer and a housewife in Congress don't mix. So the housewife is trying to do something about that dirty strainer, plus other abuses and loopholes in the Pure Food and Drug Act.
 Leonor Sullivan (D., Mo.) is convinced that when her fellow housewives around the nation learn what she knows about the food situation, they'll help her make her bill law.
 The Sullivan measure would permit Food and Drug Administration inspectors to enter any food production plant and look around. Under the present law, they can do so only when the proprietor agrees.
 Mrs. Sullivan feels that the change is necessary.
 "Imagine oyster-waterers opening their arms to government inspectors," she says. She thinks it will come as a surprise to many housewives to know how such crooks operate. "They soak oysters in water until they absorb up 50 per cent more than their normal water content," she says.
 In one case, under the present law, two packers were charged with 12 counts of watering oysters. The defense attorney reminded the judge that the packers hadn't authorized the inspection. The judge instructed the jury to disregard evidence obtained during plant inspection.
 The jury's verdict, despite the fact that the packers had pocketed an illegal $26,000 at the expense of the American housewife, was not guilty.
 "The consumer," insists Mrs. Sullivan, "has swallowed the idea that everything he buys in this country is automatically clean and pure." But that just isn't so, she says, and FDA inspectors have found example after example of unclean, impure food on sale in retail stores.
 Here are some flagrant instances:
 One 15-ounce can of peas disclosed 26 insects per serving. You wouldn't be able to see them, though; they were in the peas.
 A slab of decomposed cheese, housing a rodent's nest.
 A creamery strainer, which was found to contain a bottle cap, a piece of potato, a spring, several hunks of charcoal and other debris.
 Chickens contaminated with fecal material and chickens that had died other than by slaughter—both in the same Delaware poultry establishment.
 Butter, containing mites and manure.
 Butter containing cow hair.
 Catsup made from rotten tomatoes.
 Ice cream and jam made from spoiled strawberries.

CAPITOL OPEN
SALEM (AP)—Oregon's capitol will be open July 4 and 5, and guide service will be available, Secretary of State Earl T. Newbry said Wednesday.
 In the past, the capitol has been closed on holidays.
 Mrs. Sullivan cites another case as a horrible example—U. S. vs. Ira D. Cardiff. Apples shipped by the Cardiff firm were suspected of containing dangerous amounts of insect spray. When FDA inspectors were refused entry to the apple plant, the government prosecuted anyway. Cardiff was fined $300 by a U. S. District Court.
 "But the verdict," Mrs. Sullivan says, "was set aside by a U. S. Court of Appeals. The government then carried the case to the Supreme Court—which rules in favor of the manufacturer."
 She explains her bill would permit inspectors to go into a plant "after first exhibiting appropriate credentials." The law now on the books says "after making request and obtaining permission to the owner, operator or custodian."
 Eighty per cent of FDA court cases are based on evidence obtained through factory inspection. Most of these violations could have been detected only by such inspection.
 Commissioner Charles W. Crawford of the FDA admits he is apprehensive that inspection authority cannot be promptly restored, much of the progress in ensuring sanitary food made during the 14 years since the law was enacted will be lost.

 Larrick points out that the great bulk of the food trade is honest and ethical. But there are dangerous exceptions.
 Every week the FDA seizes 164 tons of contaminated food.
