Hog Losses From Heat Can Be Held

CHICAGO — New ways for farmers to prevent hog losses due to the heat of the hot summer days are outlined in the July issue of the National Live Stock Producer, the nation's leading live stock journal. The magazine points out that hogs weighing from 70 to 144 pounds gain most efficiently at temperatures of 75 degrees F. Hogs weighing from 166 to 260 pounds will gain best at 60 degrees F. These temperatures are a far cry from the 90 to 100 degree hot spells throughout the nation this time of year. At 60 degrees F., fattening hogs require about 300 pounds of feed for each 100 pounds of gain and as much as 1,296 pounds of feed is required for each 100 pounds of gain at temperatures of 91 degrees F. Hog weather tests indicate that hogs under 150 pounds waste 7 bushels of grain out of every 10 at 90 degrees temperatures. Pigs between 160 and 260 pounds waste 72 per cent of their feed. Keep your hogs cool on the farm with an open shed with hay or straw piled on top to keep out the sun or provide them with a sanitary wallow. A concrete bathtub helps hogs overcome the heat on the farm of Charlie Owens of Harpster, O. His hogs enjoy the sanitary hog wallow which keeps them cool and a thin film of oil on the surface protects them from lice and other parasites. Hogs beat the heat on the farm of Robert C. Turner of Henry, Ill., by taking "midnight snacks" under electric lights controlled with a time clock. In a 63-day test from July 1 to Sept. 2, these porkers gained an average of 1.45 pounds per day to produce 100 pounds of pork on 275 pounds of feed. Lights went on for feeding periods at 10 to 11:30 p.m. and 2 to 3:30 a.m. Two 150 watt bulbs with reflectors lighted the feeding area at a cost of about 7 cents per hog.
