Warm, dry weather in the Midwest brought a little buying into corn and soybeans, both of which scored moderate gains. Lard rose sharply in a continuation of its advance of the past few weeks.

Vocalist Given Bloody Death

NEW YORK (AP) — The nude, bloodied body of a lovely blonde singer was found in her West side apartment Thursday by police who went there after reading a man's suicide note which was written by her.

The young woman, Florence Forsberg, vocalist in the chorus of the Broadway hit, "Wonderful Town," had been beaten about the head and stabbed and there were marks on her throat, police said.

The death note was written by Lester Johnson, 25, who, police said, apparently killed himself with a rifle in his own bedroom about two miles away.

The note said: "I killed Florence Forsberg. And it gave her address — 34 West 69th St., just off Central Park.

Dr. Jerome De Crosse, of Roosevelt Hospital, said she appeared to have been dead three or four hours when police found her.

"Wonderful Town" stars Rosalind Russell. Showing at the Winter Garden, it is a musical version of the prize-winning hit play, "My Sister Eileen."

Child Labor Faces Blow

SALEM (AP) — State Labor Commissioner W. E. Kimsey said Thursday he is cracking down on employment of young boys at race tracks, rodeos and carnivals.

Kimsey said he is working with the Multnomah County sheriff and State Racing Commission to keep unauthorized minors under 18 years old off Portland Meadows track and out of the barn area.

No person under 18 can work without a state work permit. He said he would make frequent checks of the track and barns. Kimsey also said he has found that boys as young as 10 years old are hanging around carnivals, seeking work.

water to float supply boats on and for the DRAINING of rivers to make the gold in their beds more get-at-able became less pressing.

But this century-old story carries a warning for us of today. Who, in this great West of ours — particularly in the river valleys of Oregon and Northern California — where water lies at the root of ALL values, knows what the water needs of the FUTURE will be?

This Klamath diversion act didn't go through the legislature and become a law — chiefly because the swiftly changing development picture of the California of the 1850's outmoded it quickly and the pressure for it died down.

But suppose it had become a law and a fact.

In that event, the whole valley of the Klamath below the diversion point would have lost its greatest asset — which is water enough for our needs.

Something else to remember: The idea of diverting the waters of the Klamath river away from their historic channel occurred to somebody back in 1857 BECAUSE AT THAT TIME THE WATER OF THE KLAMATH RIVER WAS NOT BEING PUT TO BENEFICIAL USE.

If we want to save our water NOW, we'd better begin to put it to beneficial use — COMPLETELY beneficial use — first for agriculture, then for industry, then for power.

In all of Southern Oregon and Northern California we'd better begin to stand together now, shoulder to shoulder, prepared to fight to the last ditch for the principle that water must be retained for use within the historic limits of its own naturally established river valleys.

Co-ed Attacked Despite Escort

CHICAGO (AP) — A co-ed was raped by two men in a West Side park early Thursday while her escort watched, helpless with a knife at his throat.

The couple told police the men forced them into buses in Union Park and each man took a turn raping the woman while the other guarded her companion.

Roland Bryan, 21, of Chicago, said he was taking the woman, Miss Betty Erickson, 20, of Bush Prairie, Wash., to a YWCA where she was staying when the men, both Negroes, approached them.

Bryan said a third man, also a Negro, later joined the rapists and helped them take $26.50 from the couple. He said the three fled together.

The woman was taken to Cook County Hospital where she was treated for shock and released. She said she is a student at Reed College, Portland, Ore. Bryan said he attends Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

Oklahoma City Cuts Water Use A Third, Yet Sees Dry Future

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Three-fourths of the earth's surface is water. You'd think there would be enough to go around.

But Oklahoma City, locked in the throes of a drought-bred water shortage with no solution in sight, has become a "worried, puzzled" community.

Its population of about 250,000, the 45th largest city in the nation, has cut its water usage about one-third — but that's not enough. Even with the reduction, the supply on hand in the city's two lakes is not expected to last past mid-November. Normal rainfall isn't expected to bolster the supply appreciably.

The water shortage hurts! The still - to - be - developed Southwest is looking for new industries. A plentiful water supply is a big lure. But here, the cloudless skies have snapped the ball off the hook.

In some Southwestern cities, where supplies have run dry, water is being trucked in.

William Morgan Cain, president of the city Chamber of Commerce, said dryly: "Industries that would ordinarily be interested in Oklahoma City have just stopped and are waiting to see how this thing turns out. A lot of them, with the situation as it is, don't even look.

"Generally, it has been bad for business in the city. People get worried and puzzled."

Taxes, too, take a beating. Mayor Allen Street pointed out normally the city collects $1,700,000 annually in water taxes. With consumption curtailed "about 20 per cent of that is lost."

Tulsa, in the northeast part of the state, is a virtual oasis. Big government dams have assured it of all the water it can use now and in the foreseeable future.

Oklahoma city fathers, who constructed a new lake a little over a decade ago thinking it would answer the city's water problem for a century, aren't waiting for Mother Nature's help.

A two million dollar bond issue has been passed to dig emergency wells.

Professional cloud seeders have been consulted and Mayor Street says they probably will be employed to produce rain along the lake's narrow watershed.

Solon Would Stockpile Food

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Flanders (R-Vt) urged Congress Thursday to let President Eisenhower use "food stockpiles like ammunition stockpiles" in the cold war.

Testifying before the Senate Agriculture Committee, Flanders proposed that the President's plan to use U. S. food surpluses to combat famine or other emergencies in friendly lands be broadened so it can operate behind the Iron Curtain.

Flanders said the United States should attempt to set up conditions such that "Soviet armies will never move" from Soviet territory. One way to do that is by encouraging resistance among the satellites, he said, and food for hungry satellite peoples would help. How he would get food to them he didn't explain.

Sen. Humphrey (D-Minn), another witness, said he was impressed with Flanders' proposal.

But members of the Agriculture Committee, both Republicans and Democrats, seemed more impressed with the idea of tying all sorts of strings to the surplus food legislation Eisenhower wants. Even before the hearings opened, Chairman Aiken (R-Vt) said he expected Congress to insist on some restrictions.

What the President asked was power, for two years, to meet famine or other relief emergencies in friendly nations by sending them government-held surpluses under whatever terms he considered proper.
