WATERS THAT CHEER, NEVER BLEAR—After watching farmers drink tepid water from a hydrant, Jerry Hinshaw, manager of the Co-op Equity Exchange in Arlington, Kan., decided to do something about it. He installed a barrel in the store room and filled it with water and ice so the farmers could fill their jugs while they waited for their grain to be weighed. The only barrel he could get was an old charred oak keg in which 50 gallons of Ye Olde Tanglefoot had grown to virile manhood. The farmers didn't mind a bit, they drank, jobbed, and went away refreshed, speaking highly of the firm's services. Above left, Jerry Hinshaw gives the barrel the sniff check, while farmer Ross Ray fills his jug from the outside tap.

Pretty Soon We'll See Whether Ike Is Getting At Honeymoon's End

By ED CREAUGH

WASHINGTON (AP)—Political honeymoons, like the other kind, seldom last forever. They may ripen into a lifetime of happy teamwork. Or they may wither into pre-divorce bickering. Frequently you can look for some sort of crisis after the first six months.

So it was with Harry S. Truman in his relations with Congress, and so it is turning out for Dwight D. Eisenhower, who succeeded Truman in the White House six months ago next Monday.

Strange as it may seem, in the light of his subsequent rows with the lawmakers, and with the Republican 80th Congress in particular, Truman and the men on Capitol Hill exchanged hardly a cross word in the momentous first half-year following Franklin D. Roosevelt's death.

It was only after Truman submitted his first legislative program, a few days short of the six month mark, that the sparring which later became a donnybrook began.

Until that time Truman's difficulties with his former colleagues were, if anything, less notable than Eisenhower's have been. There were no such controversies as the one over confirmation of Charles E. Wilson as secretary of defense or, more recently, over the Air Force budget.

Trouble with Congress, of course, is the last thing Eisenhower has wanted. He has tried so hard to avoid it, in fact, that some Democrats have complained his administration jacks strong leadership.

Eisenhower's own attitude, as he has expressed it privately as well as publicly, could be summed up in a homely adage: You catch more flies with sugar than you do with vinegar.

Persuasion, rather than denunciation, is his stock in trade. And, halfway through his first year in office, he has found it advisable to persuade oftener and harder than ever before.

With Congress in a rush to adjourn at the end of this month, Eisenhower has telephoned key legislators, had them to frequent

White House conferences. On a single day this week he breakfasted with the men who control the purse strings in the House, lunched with their counterparts in the Senate.

"He didn't try to pressure us," one lawmaker said afterward. "He didn't even ask for anything specific. He just talked about the general picture and gave us some information we hadn't had before. It was a most effective presentation."

But it didn't stop the House group from voting, only 24 hours later, to slash more than a billion dollars from the President's foreign aid program—a cornerstone of his whole foreign policy.

This was only a subcommittee action. There's a chance for part or all of the cut to be restored later in the legislative process. But time is short and persuasion takes time. The next two weeks may tell whether Eisenhower's honeymoon with Congress will ripen—or, like many another honeymoon, will be interrupted by a quarrel over money.
