PINT-SIZED POOL PICKETS—Neighborhood children in Detroit, Mich., want to wade in the Water Works Park pool and start picketing to dramatize their desires. The park was closed for "security reasons" after the Korean war started. Now that the war has ended, a city official has promised to take the matter up with City Council.

ALONG NATURE'S TRAIL

By KEN McLEOD

A few weeks ago this column mentioned the fact that science is beginning to find a use for obsidian in mirrors for astronomical use. This adds another use of this volcanic rock to the list of items to which this natural glass has been of service to man.

The uses for obsidian probably go farther back in the pages of history than for any other volcanic rock. While the modern day scientist has just discovered the rock can be used for his special fashioned mirrors, this discovery was not something new in the history of man as obsidian mirrors were used by Mayas centuries ago.

Obsidian found its greatest use however in the early economy of aboriginal man as a source of arrowheads, spear points and skinning knives, as well as for other cutting tools and scrapers. Today, small amounts of beautifully colored and patterned obsidian are finding their way into rock collections and exhibits and also fashioned into spheres for museum pieces.

If we should direct our attention to obsidian and trace its origin we would find quite a study field open in the subject of volcanic rocks of which obsidian forms one series. The outer crust of the earth on which man lives has been called the "lithosphere" by scientists. This "lithosphere" is made up of three kinds of rocks which are called igneous, sedimentary and metamorphic. The igneous rocks are further divided into two series called volcanic and plutonic rocks.

The plutonic rocks were formed at great depths below the surface of the earth and reached the surface of the earth through the processes that involved mountain building. Granite is a typical plutonic rock. The volcanic rocks are the solid products of volcanic activity that formed on or near the surface of the earth and lava is one of the most common examples.

Sedimentary rocks, which form one of the three major classifications of rocks making up the lithosphere, are rocks that had their origin through the consolidation of sediments partly derived from living organisms but chiefly from the destruction and redispersion of other pre-existing rocks. Sandstone, shale and limestone are examples of this class of sedimentary rock. The metamorphic series of rocks that form the third great series of rocks in the structure of the lithosphere include a great group of rocks formed from other pre-existing rocks by mineralogical, chemical, and structural alteration acting through heat, pressure and solutions. Thus sandstone, shale, and limestone—all of which are of the sedimentary series—may be altered by heat and pressure in Nature's metamorphic process to become quartzite, slate and marble respectively. Similarly, granite, a common igneous rock, and rhyolite, a typical lava or volcanic rock when subject to Nature's metamorphic process, are altered respectively to gneiss and schist, both common metamorphic rocks.

The study of rocks makes up one of the interesting phases of geology. The volcanic group are among the most interesting and are of special interest to the Klamath Basin since here these volcanic rocks have accumulated in gigantic heaps to form our mountains and have spread out into thin flows that extend over hundreds of square miles. Volcanic ash and the disintegration of these rocks are the basic foundation of our rich and fertile soils.

Volcanic rocks being the solid products of volcanic activity have been classified into three groups—the lavas, the pyroclastic rocks (fragmental rocks) and the volcanic glasses.

Lava represents rock that was extruded onto the surface of the earth in a molten state and allowed to cool and harden.

The pyroclastic rocks represent

'Love Will Find A Way': Story Of John Erickson

By BOB THOMAS
 HOLLYWOOD (AP) — This story could be called "perseverance Pays" or "Love Will Find A Way."

It concerns a handsome young lad named John Erickson. He was in love. He was also broke. Here's how he solved his problem:

Three years ago, John was an actor with high hopes and low prospects. He had the seasoning of three years in summer stock and two years in the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. But he couldn't crack the big time.

Then he heard that Fred Zinneman was interviewing all comers for leading roles in "Teresa," a picture to be made in Italy. John tried out for the role and won it.

The picture made Pier Angeli a star, but it didn't do wonders for John. MGM was willing to sign him as well as Pier, but at inflated prices. John held out for more money and was turned down.

"I really didn't want to sign," he remarked. "I was afraid I would get stuck playing neurotic characters, like the one I did in 'Teresa.'"

The film did bring him one piece of luck—the leading role in "Stalag 17" on the New York stage.

During the Chicago run of the show, John fell in love with Milly Coury, lovely young night club singer. They wanted to get married, but first John would have to find some security. He got a release from the play and came to Hollywood.

The going was rough. Studios were dropping their contract players and hiring no new ones. John went jobless for 16 weeks. He drew unemployment insurance from the state of New York, but the $30 a week scarcely kept him going.

"Finally I was down to my last $100," he related. "I had heard about a part in 'Rhapsody' which I thought I could do. But I couldn't even get the producer or director on the telephone. One day I was at MGM and I decided to she bawled some more." Milly Coury, 23, will become bride of John Erickson, 25, on Sept. 12 at the Church of the Good Shepherd in Beverly Hills, Calif., for a Hollywood ending?

French Report Withdrawal

HANOI, Indochina (AP) — The French announced their withdrawal from the mountain fortress of Na San today and said the move was part of new tactics to take the "Maoist Line" concept out of the Indochina war.

Gen. Rene Cogny said the chief value of Na San, 100 miles west of Hanoi, and the last strong French base in the Thai tribal country, had been to threaten numerous rebel battalions in the jungle.
