Ammo Stocks, Readiness Ample

WASHINGTON (AP)—America now lacks enough ammunition for all-out war, but production at three times the Korean War total will bring next year "a readiness posture never heretofore attained."

That was the estimate of a Senate armed services subcommittee headed by Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R-Maine).

It was released last night, its optimistic tone in sharp contrast to the same group's report in May that ammunition was critically scarce for nearly two years in Korea, causing "a needless loss of American lives."

The special subcommittee's latest report said ammunition shortages in Korea had ended before the truce silenced the guns last month.

It predicted that ammunition production during the fiscal year which began July 1 will be greater than during all three years of the Korean War.
