

"SEE" THE SIGHTS — Blind twins, Barbara and Joe-Lee Crane, 12, "see" a bust of Henry Clay, famous American statesman, by running their hands over the sculpture. The children toured New York City Hall with a Hunter College group devoted to aiding handicapped youngsters.

No Eyebrow-Raising As Kinsey Questions with what they first said, he reports. Some women after interview said the calm questioning led them to report things they didn't intend to tell. Of nearly 6,000 women represented in this book, 69 per cent lived in 10 states possessing about 47 per cent of the total U. S. population—New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, California, New Jersey, Ohio, Florida, Massachusetts and Maryland. Kinsey says, more histories are needed from women in the southeast, Pacific Northwest, the High Plains, and Rocky Mountain areas. Of women in this book, 58.2 per cent had never been married when interviewed, 41.8 per cent had been or were then married, and 13.2 per cent were widowed, separated or divorced. Sixty per cent were Protestant, 12 per cent Catholic, and 28 per cent Jewish. He says more Catholic and devoutly Jewish women need to be represented.

ports on sex. His fame in scientific circles traces back long before he began his sex studies 15 years ago, before he came to public attention with his book on men five years ago. Born in Hoboken, N. J., in 1894, he was graduated from Bowdoin College in 1916, won his doctor of science degree in biology at Harvard in 1920. He became assistant professor of zoology at Indiana University here that year, and full professor in 1929. He is author of a textbook on biology which has sold more than 400,000 copies, and is well known among biologists for monumental work classifying the many species of gall wasps, a widespread insect. The scientific methods used in this work he applied to study of human sex behavior and variations when he decided there was too little factual information about this important aspect of human life. His research has been supported from the first by the National Research Council through the Rockefeller Foundation, and more recently from all profits from his books. Dr. Kinsey is one of eight starred men of science at Indiana, an honor won by relatively few American scientists. A popular teacher, he works a six-day week, often brings a sandwich to the office for lunch. His garden at his Bloomington home excites admiration of other gardeners. For years, his Sunday friends, neighbors and students to concerts from a great library of classical records has attracted Mrs. Kinsey is the former Clara B. McMillen. The Kinseys have had four children, one of whom died in early childhood.
