Democrats Openly Gleeful About Failure Of Ike's Bold Political Durkin Stroke

By JOE HALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Martin P. Durkin's sudden bow-out as secretary of labor rang down the curtain in less than eight months on a bold political stroke attempted by President Eisenhower and his advisers.

Democrats, openly gleeful over the break in Cabinet ranks, quickly predicted the administration would not find another man with a strong union background to take the post.

One Democratic senator, Maybank of South Carolina, commented: "I would seriously suggest that others (in the Cabinet) should resign."

Sen. Hill (D-Ala), a long-time member of the Senate Labor Committee said in an interview: "They'll never get another Marty Durkin for the job. They'll have to take someone now who is willing to march in the ranks of the Taft-Hartleyites."

This reference to the controversial Taft-Hartley labor relations law struck at the heart of Durkin's falling out with the administration. In handing in his resignation, Durkin accused the White House—but not Eisenhower personally — of breaking an agreement with him to seek 19 specific proposed changes in the law.

Maybank said he was not surprised at the resignation, because he said "This administration has not done anything for labor, for agriculture or for the taxpayer."

Asked if his suggestion about other resignations was aimed at Secretary of Agriculture Ezra T. Benson and Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey, Maybank said Benson has "done nothing except create confusion in the farm belt" and Humphrey raised interest rates "for veterans and homeowners."

Republicans in Congress seemed loath to comment, for the most part, like Sen. Dirksen (R-Ill) who said that, although Durkin hails from his state, "Any comment I would make on his resignation would be a shot in the dark."

However, Rep. Kearns (R-Pa) a member of the House Labor Committee, said he thought Durkin's ideas for changing the Taft-Hartley law were "too self-styled."

"Amendments to the Taft-Hartley law will be written here in Congress," Kearns said.

At Chicago, Democratic National Chairman Stephen A. Mitchell commented:

"It is now obvious that the appointment was one of political expediency rather than a sincere effort by the administration to solve the problems of working people.

"Mr. Durkin has a reputation for sincerity and patience. His patience was apparently tried too long, and his sincerity still is beyond question."

Eisenhower's surprise selection of Durkin for the labor post was hailed at the time as a political triple play. It was reasoned then:

1. That it would appease organized labor, which staunchly opposed the GOP ticket in the 1952 elections, because Durkin had risen through the ranks to become top man in a prominent labor union—the plumbers.

2. That it would woo independent Democrats since Durkin was a member of that party and had supported its 1952 presidential ticket.

3. That it would please Catholics because Durkin was of that faith—the only Catholic in the Cabinet.

The Senate and House Labor Committees conducted long hearings on revision of the Taft-Hartley law—one of the points in the Eisenhower legislative program for 1953—but Durkin never testified.

Durkin told reporters yesterday he was invited to testify by both committees but had not done so, because the administration never had made up its mind on its stand, on the controversial law. He said he saw no point in testifying "only as to Mr. Durkin's views."

Sen. Kilgore (D-WVa), in a speech prepared for a state CIO convention at Huntington, W. Va., today described Durkin's position "in the Republican big-business administration" as "like an ambassador to a foreign court."

The text of Kilgore's speech was distributed before Durkin's resignation was announced.

"Yes, a union man was appointed secretary of labor—and you can count the friends of labor in the new administration on one finger," Kilgore commented.

The senator said that "candidate Eisenhower" promised in the 1952 campaign to remove "union-busting" provisions of the Taft-Hartley law.

But these provisions are still in the law and the President never even sent any "specific recommendations" to Congress on Taft-Hartley revision as he promised in his state of the union message, Kilgore asserted.

Bing Too Busy To Attend Premier Of Last Movie

By JAMES BACON
(For Bob Thomas)

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—The life of a movie star is a great one, if one lives like Bing.

Paramount staged the premiere of Bing's new movie, "Little Boy Lost," last week but Bing was too busy fishing in Idaho to attend.

It would have been a real chore to get him to come even if he had been in town so Paramount did the next best thing. The studio brought co-star Nicole Maurey all the way from Paris just to attend the opening.

But the voluptuous French doll—Crosby calls her a combination of Rita Hayworth and the farmer's daughter—more than earned her plane fare.

She made three television appearances and gave 25 separate interviews to the press and met representatives of the foreign press in one huge press conference. In addition, she did several radio broadcasts, met with several French groups, attended her own premiere and also one of John Wayne's, made two night club appearances and went to several parties.

All of this happened in less than a week. She boarded a plane in Paris on a Monday and traveled continually until early Wednesday morning. She was back on the plane en route home the following Sunday.

The Paramount publicity department reports that she withstood the pace in great shape, even though she averaged less than six hours sleep a night. Of the two publicity men assigned to her, one was unable to report to work the following week and the other one showed up groggy.

If there ever were any misgivings about the box office pull of 3D, director George Sidney dispels them here and now.

Although never publicized as such, Sidney holds the dubious distinction of being the first 3D director. Back in the middle '30s, he directed several Pete Smith shorts in the new dimension.

The shorts, if you recall, required the use of red and green glasses and caused quite a stir at the time. However, they caused no revolution because Hollywood was making money at the time. Hollywood revolts only in time of box office unrest.

MGM recently pieced several of the old shorts together and presented them as a 3D attraction in England. Sidney reports that they are making a mint.

Sidney is about to play another important role in 3D. He has just finished "Kiss Me, Kate," the musical that may well decide the fate of 3D. The movie, shot in both 3D and flat versions, is a typical plush Metro musical. It will be released in November on a test basis.

Two theaters in New England will show it in 3D. The box office results will be watched closely.

Sidney disclosed that Texas was chosen because the Lone Star State is 3D crazy at the moment. What does Sidney think will happen?

"I believe that there will be a place for all mediums," says Sidney. "Some pictures will lend themselves to each medium."

FTC Head Asks Probe Of Gas, Oil Boosts

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an attack on recent oil and gasoline price boosts, Federal Trade Commissioner Stephen J. Spingarn Thursday called on the government to bring about "a competitive market or some form of supervision" over the oil industry.

He estimated that increases in the past three months will cost consumers and taxpayers between 500 million and one billion dollars a year, including a 50 million dollar jump in petroleum costs to the armed forces.

Spingarn's term on the Trade Commission expires Sept. 25. A Democrat, he will be replaced by Republican John W. Gwynne of Iowa. FTC then will have a Republican majority.

Spingarn's statement declared the worldwide round of price increases reflects a decision by the international oil companies to continue basing world prices on current American market prices despite greatly improved world supplies.

"If this decision goes unchallenged," he said, "the international oil companies will be provided with a precedent on the basis of which they will be able to drive prices in world markets to higher and higher levels. . ."

TAIL SNIPPED

SALEM (AP) — The vandal who hacked six inches off the flowing tail of a prize palomino horse was being sought Thursday by police at the Oregon State Fair.

The horse is owned by Rose Franke Wilhelm, Salem.

HAS THE IDEA EARLY

HOUSTON (AP) — Stevie Hamilton, 6, failed to return home on time from his first day in school.

Police found him six hours later, en route home. Stevie's explanation:

"I stayed after school to see my girl."

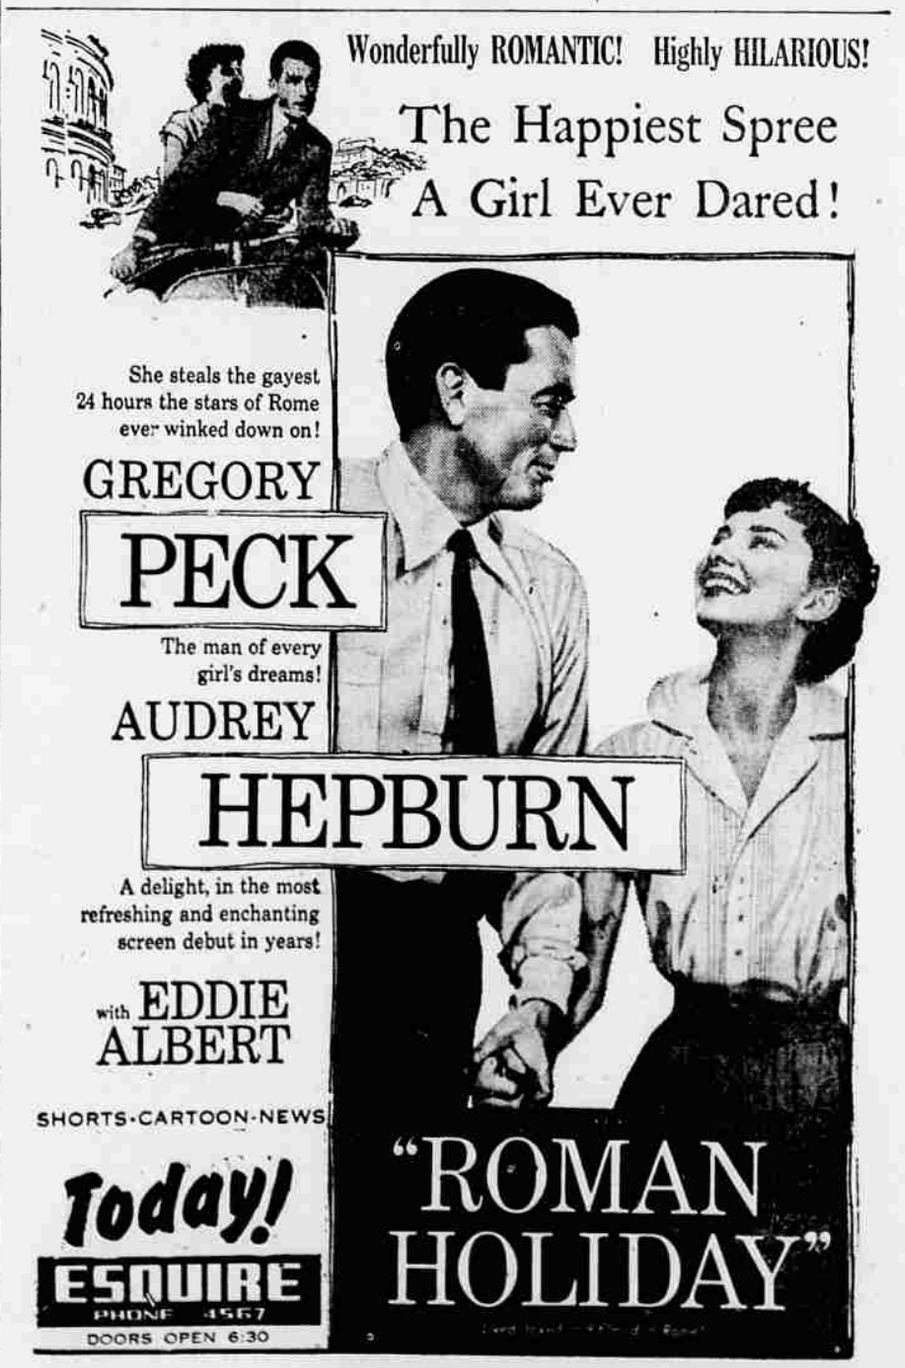
Dean's Wife's Body In Brush

CORVALLIS (AP) — A three-day search for Mrs. Frank Zeran, 47, wife of the dean of the school of education at Oregon State College, ended Wednesday with discovery of her body in the brush southwest of here.

Milo Askay, sheriff's deputy, said she apparently had taken her own life. He said her body was found beside the family car at the foot of Alsea Mountain, about 14 miles from here. Askay said she had used a hose and exhaust fumes from the car to asphyxiate herself, apparently on Sunday, the day she disappeared.


He added that the dean said his wife had been despondent over recent ill health.
