

Idaho Power Says Other Snake Site Studies Made

WASHINGTON (AP)—Idaho Power Co. has made "very rough" studies on power projects at three Snake River sites other than Oxbow, Brownlee and Hells Canyon but, according to its chief engineer, has no existing plans to develop them.

Disclosure of the company's further Snake River studies came Friday at a Power Commission hearing on the firm's applications to build dams at Oxbow, Brownlee and Hells Canyon.

Engineer E. A. Woodhead, designer of the three projects at current issue, identified the new studies while being cross-examined by Mrs. Evelyn Cooper, attorney for pro-public power groups that want a big federal dam in Hells Canyon instead of the project planned by the company.

Woodhead, while tabbing the new studies "very rough" and stating he knew of no present plans to follow through on them, said the estimates outline three projects with a total installed capacity of 140,000 kilowatts. Company plans for Oxbow, Brownlee and Hells Canyon call for a total installed capacity of 780,000 kilowatts.

He located the new projects at Dyke, 6 1/2 miles below the company's Bliss Dam; Guffey, 16 miles above Nampa; and Eagle Rock, 6 1/2 miles below American Falls Dam.

Woodhead estimated the per kilowatt cost of the projects as follows: Dyke $234, Guffey $284 and Eagle Rock $250.

These figures compare with an estimated per kilowatt cost of $156.30 for the company's proposed Oxbow Dam and an average of $189.75 for Brownlee and Hells Canyon.

Woodhead agreed that Mrs. Cooper was "substantially correct" Power has some 45,500 kilowatts of undeveloped potential at existing sites.

Woodhead, who had been on the stand since Monday, was excused temporarily late in the day, but will return next week for redirect examination by his own attorney.

He was followed by Bernard Williams, vice president of Morrison-Knudsen Co., who repeated earlier testimony that his company would be willing to undertake construction of the three Idaho Power dams for the 133 million dollars which the company estimates they would cost.

Movies, T-V Ready Battle For Public's Attention

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—During the past two weeks, television has brought out its "big guns" in the battle for the public's attention. Now the fight begins.

The movie industry, which is fighting for its future, must face an imposing array of opponents on the home screen. The question is: Can movies offer enough exciting attractions to combat all that free entertainment? We shall see.

Meanwhile, here are some sideline observations on the TV debut of "I Love Lucy" bowed in Monday with a show that wasn't as surefire as usual. However, it was like greeting old friends to see Rick and Lucy, Fred and Ethel again. They'll pick up their stride.

Most promising of the new shows: Danny Thomas' "Make Room for Daddy." It's overloaded with sentiment, but Thomas dishes it up painlessly. "Letters to Loretta." The premise is rather lame, but Miss Young looks like a definite star and acts like a dream.

Paul Hartman ("Pride of the Family") could be one of TV's top clowns, but his scripts will have to become less obvious. After all the announced changes, "Your Show of Shows" looks the same as ever—and that ain't bad. But all those commercials are enough to scare any viewer away.

Martha Raye's beginning show was a screamer. No gai is more consistently funny, and few males. Few shows wear better week after week than "Mister Peepers." A perfect cast. Man who rises above his material: Red Buttons. Ditto Jackie Gleason. Both deserve better from their writers.

The Milton Berle show is improved about 1000 per cent over his old variety format. Bravest man in TV: Dennis Day, who allowed his program to appear at the same time as "I Love Lucy" . . . Second bravest: Red Skelton, who is on opposite Berle, Bob Hope and Bishop Sheen. The Sacklon offering is really an improvement. American hunter routine this week was a gem.

Emergency Still Here

NEW YORK (AP)—Two official moves in Washington last week served to remind businessmen that the defense emergency isn't over yet.

The railroads got an "urgent request" from defense Administrator James K. Knudson to add 76,000 new freight cars to their rolling stock. Railroad men were inclined to view the "request" as pretty much of an ultimatum.

The Defense Department announced it is ready to grant fast tax write-off privileges to certain companies for building factories of extra-strong construction as protection against bomb attacks. To qualify for the tax break, plants must be located in officially designated target areas.

These developments came as business activity showed little change from the previous week's tempo. Auto production, paper-board output, bank clearings, money in circulation and retail trade moved sideways rather than up or down; scheduled steel production was a shade lower.

Uncertainties were created in the minds of many business men by a succession of conflicting state ments out of Washington about Russia's hydrogen bomb potential. Many wondered what effect new defense requirements might have on administration plans for lower taxes and a balanced budget.

Somewhat disappointing to businessmen was treasury Secretary Humphrey's recommendation that the present corporate income tax rate be kept at 52 per cent after March 31 if it's scheduled to drop to 47 per cent and that excise taxes on automobiles, trucks and cigars, also slated for decreases on that date, be continued at present levels.

Auto production zoomed this week as Chrysler stepped up output of 1954 models. The industry turned out the year's five millionth passenger car and set its sights on total 1953 production of 7 1/2 million cars and trucks, despite complaints from retail dealers many of whom were reported offering discounts up to $500 in a frenzied effort to unload 1953 models.
