...estis Sank With 111 Lives ...ost on Nov. 10, 1928

By MARTIN POST

...W YORK (AP)—The 10th day ...ovember 1928 was a fine clear ... in New York.

...erbert Hoover was the nation's ...sident-elect, and already Gov- ...r elect Franklin D. Roosevelt ...New York was being hailed as ... future hope of the Democratic ...

...the New York exchanges, the ...e markes was boiling up to ...rd heights, and in Italy Mt. ... was boiling over the sur- ...ding countryside.

...Stockholm" was in its 46th week ...Broadway and going strong.

...Hoboken, N. J., 328 men, ...en and children—129 passeng- ...rs and 199 crew—climbed the ...plank of the British steamer ...estis for a time-tested voyage ...South America.

...he 10,494-ton ship, Capt. Will- ...J. Carey at the helm, stood ...to sea, creating hardly a ripple ...the passing scene. Some said later they could not see her plim- ...soll mark (load line) as she went by. Others remembered she may have had a slight list.

Two days later—25 years ago today—the liner went down in a violent storm, taking 111 of her passengers and crew to their deaths.

The Vestris had clearance from the U. S. steamboat inspection service, which found her fire-fighting and life-saving equipment in order, and from Lloyd's surveyors, who found hull and equipment generally in good shape. But months later, after extensive probing, a court of the British Board of Trade said the Vestris was not in safe condition when she left Hoboken.

Yet no one ever successfully challenged in an American court the contention of the owners, the Liverpool, Brazil and River Plate Steamship Co., Ltd., and the operators, Lamport and Holt, that the disaster of sea was an act of God, brought on by a lashing hurricane.

Eight years later an American judge declared lawsuits that reached a peak of five million dollars were settled. Claimants got 110,000 pounds, the equivalent in those days of around $500,000.

The lights of New York hardly out of sight, the Vestris ran into freshening weather early Sunday, Nov. 81.

The wind was from the north-east and the ship began listing 3 to 5 degrees to starboard. Slowly she began to take on water. The list became more pronounced and the weather grew worse.

At noon Sunday, some 240 miles off the Virginia Capes, with the Vestris veering wildly, Carey hove into a trough of the sea and ordered engines stopped.

Water poured into the stricken vessel. Pumps strained ineffectually; even a bucket brigade was tried at one point.

Two heavy seas hit the Vestris a one-two punch Sunday night. Twelve tons of motor cars broke loose and crashed into the seamen's quarters.

On Monday Carey radioed his office:

"During night developed a 32-degree list. Starboard decks under water. Ship lying on beam ends. Impossible proceed anywhere."

At 8:37 a. m. Monday, Nov. 12, Carey ordered his chief wireless man, M. J. O'Loughlin, to send a "CQ" signal, an alert. Seventy-nine minutes later he flashed an SOS.

For four hours radio stations along the Atlantic coast were off the air, fearing to interfere with the communications between the doomed ship and the rescuers rushing to her side.

"Oh, please, come at once," O'Loughlin pleaded. "We need immediate assistance."

At 11:30 a.m. a watertight bulkhead between the engine room and stokehold gave way and the fight to stay afloat was all but over.

On the lopsided world that was the Vestris, frantic efforts were under way to float the lifeboats. Three boats were lowered to within 15 feet of the water, and the screaming women and bewildered, sobbing children were placed in them.

But something went wrong. One lifeboat never got loose. It went down with the ship. One was cut free, but it capsized. Another got clear but was swamped.

At 1:40 p.m. the heroic O'Loughlin uttered his final "goodbye." He was not among the survivors.

Other lifeboats and a raft got free of the sinking ship. Male passengers and crewman swarmed over the side and jumped into the shark-infested waters, whose waves sometimes towered 100 feet in the air.

Fourteen hours later rescuers picked up eight boats. A man and a woman were found clinging to debris 18 hours after they left the Vestris.

Carey's last order was to a sea man: "Get your lifebelt on. Pay no attention to me."

Then the captain wrote "end" to his 40-odd years at sea. Alone, and without a lifebelt, he turned wearily and walked down the side of his ship into the sea.

"My God, my God," he cried, "I am not to blame for this."

The Board of Trade agreed and absolved Carey and his British officers of any wrongdoing.

The first ship to reach the disaster scene got there four hours and 20 minutes after the Vestris was abandoned. It found nothing.

Other ships, including the American battlewagon Wyoming, arrived. In bleak darkness nine of them scoured the sea in widening circles. The wind blew at 80 miles per hour. The sea rolled, rain poured down and powerful ships' searchlights barely dented the thick fog.

Finally, at 4 a.m., the SS American Shipper sighted a flare, then a lifeboat. Eight boats were picked up. The raft was gone.

Survivors so weak they couldn't grasp the lines dropped to them were placed in rope nets and Brave sailors flirted with death in the storm to tie other victims to ropes.
