Less Water Than Usual Stored in Columbia River Basin, But Report Early

PORTLAND — Less water than usual is stored in snow that lies over the Columbia River basin. As a result, the outlook right now is for a 1954 runoff in the main river only 84 per cent of the 10-year average.

The year's first water forecast for the basin, released Saturday by the U. S. Weather Bureau and the Soil Conservation Service, pointed out however that while this is the situation now, there is plenty of time for winter to change it. Indeed, only about a third of the winter's accumulation of snow is normally at hand by Jan. 1. The expected two-thirds hold the answer to what can be expected in the way of irrigation water supplies next summer. If precipitation is heavier than average, an average year may be had; and if snow continues light, the water outlook will continue to fail.

On the main stem of the Columbia, the forecast for this water year at the three key measurement points as of Jan. 1 was: At Grand Coulee, Wash., 70,100,000 acre feet of runoff which is 87 per cent of the 1942-51 average; at Trinidad, Wash., 76,800,000 acre feet, 88 per cent; and at the Dalles, Ore., 117,000,000 acre feet, 84 per cent.

The report, prepared by Anthony J. Polos, hydrologist in charge of the Weather Bureau's river forecast center, and Morlan W. Nelson,

McCarthy Turns Big Guns On Rumors Of Officials Lining Pockets In Deal

WASHINGTON — Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis.), who has spent most of the past year hunting Reds, moved into a new field Saturday—investigation of charges that government officials have lined their own pockets out of federally-financed Alaskan development projects.

McCarthy announced Friday that his Senate investigations subcommittee will start closed hearings next week to consider reports from its staff probes who recently returned after two months in the territory.

The subcommittee has authority to examine any situation where federal funds are involved. Since McCarthy became chairman, it has been devoting most attention to charges of Communist penetration in the federal service. Recent published reports that the administration had induced McCarthy to work in other fields brought a flat denial from the senator.

But he said "there is nothing to indicate that Communism will be an important element" in the Alaska inquiry — the first major project announced for his subcommittee in this new session of Congress.

McCarthy said there was "no significance at all" in this, adding: "This case just happens to be ready now."

The senator said his subcommittee will continue its investigation of Communism in several areas. The Alaska probe, he explained, will cover charges "of false claims, bribery, misapplication of government funds and waste of millions of dollars in various development projects financed directly or indirectly by the federal government."

In this connection, he said the subcommittee would examine "the conduct of various individuals who held governmental positions dealing with Alaska to determine whether some of the Alaskan develop-

Calls to Your Doctor

The physicians of Klamath County are operating a 24-hour Telephone Exchange at Klamath Valley Hospital (Phone 2-2591) to facilitate receiving calls from patients after doctors' regular office hours.

If you cannot contact your doctor after regular hours, call the Exchange and the operator will try to locate him for you.

In emergency cases, the operator will call the physician of your choice; otherwise a physician from the emergency panel will be called.

Emergency calls can be handled more efficiently through the Exchange than privately and every effort will be made to locate a physician as quickly as possible. The public can help a great deal by limiting calls strictly to real emergencies and by giving accurate information to the operator.

Medical care in general can be improved if everyone will select a family physician in advance of medical needs. Any physician in Klamath County will be pleased to have you come to his office or call to arrange for possible future services. At this interview, he can obtain whatever information may be necessary for taking care of your future medical requirements, and you will have an opportunity to become acquainted with him and his office staff. Newer residents are particularly urged to do this.
