By CORA LEAVITT
Bob Seater was painfully injured in a plane crash February 1. He and Elmer Cramer, employed by Gerbers, were looking for cattle from the air. They had refueled at Lakeview and were on their way home when their engine conked out and they crashed over Devil's Garden's 12 miles from Bly. Cramer's safety belt held and he was not injured. Seater's belt didn't hold and he was thrown from the plane, suffering bad cuts on the face and bruises on his neck and shoulders.

The men walked seven miles to the highway through deep snow. Catching a ride to the Gerber ranch they got a car and came into Klamath Valley Hospital where Bob had 56 stitches. Between the years 1942 and 1945 Bob flew over 3,000 miles and this was his first crack-up. The plane, belonging to Menti-Newlin, was demolished.
