

NEW KITCHEN HELP on the market is the Foley Filter. Of attractive, modern design, the filter is made of aluminum and small enough to store in a kitchen cabinet drawer. To use, it is necessary only to insert filter paper and place on shortening or coffee can. It fits securely and because it is made with two convenient handles, it is not necessary to wait for fat to cool before straining. The Foley Manufacturing Company's products are carried by several of Klamath Falls' leading hardware and appliance stores.

FOUND: LOST SPACE under the stairs. Even that odd-shaped wall and space under the stairs, once considered good only for a catch-all closet, can be changed into something useful and attractive. Shown here is a series of recessed, stair-step bookcases of Douglas fir, which are set out a few inches from the wall. All the wood was finished with a clear varnish to which a slight amount of white pigment was added. A simple moulding was used around the exposed bookcases to give a picture frame effect. Some of the individual shelves were fitted with matching hinged cabinet doors. The bookshelves follow the contour of the stairs, increasing in height toward the rear. — Photo courtesy West Coast Lumberman's

HOOKED RUGS

To prevent clothespin marks on looped, pile or hooked small rugs, baste a six-inch strip of muslin along one edge before putting the rug into the washer. This strip, folded over the clothesline, can be fastened for drying and clothespin grooves in the rug are avoided.

Quality Paint Pays In House Painting

A warning comes from the National Lumber Manufacturers' association that too frequent painting of the exterior of your house may increase paint failures.

Under normal conditions, and assuming that the surface is already covered with good quality paint, it indicates the house with wood siding probably will not require repainting more often than once every four to six years.

"You aren't helping your house if you repaint more frequently," spokesman for the association declares. "In fact, you may be hurting it. Here's why:

"Quality paints weather away slowly. They give their best service when the coating is about five-thousandths of an inch thick—not much thicker than our paper money. As a rule, repainting more often than once every four to six years will build up an unnecessary and troublesome thickness of paint which may crack and peel, requiring costly removal of the entire paint film.

"However, the first painting of a newly erected house, particularly when done with only two coats, is often scanty and may wear away to the point where it will be safe to repaint the house in less than the normal length of time."

Not all paint cracking and peeling is due to over-painting, he said. Moisture is one of the most frequent causes. Inferior paints offer poor resistance to moisture, so frequently become more expensive than top quality.

When moisture blisters occur, the association recommends that all loose paint be removed by scraping or wire brushing and the edges of the paint around each blister be sanded. The exposed bare spots should be primed, then coated with a paint recommended for its moisture resistance. Repainting the entire exterior of a house to correct localized moisture blistering is unnecessary and may contribute to a more serious type of paint failure.

The lumber group suggests that it's a waste of time and money to repaint your house just because the present paint is dirty. It recommends that you scrub the present paint with a long handled brush or sponge and a mild detergent, then rinse with a garden hose before the detergent dries.

PUBLIC WANTS ROSE

The rose was chosen by 74.3 per cent of the persons answering a questionnaire which asked: "The United States has no national flower. If the choice were presented to you, what flower would you select as the national symbol?"

WASH OUT PATTERN

If you're bothered by traces of stamping ink left on the fabric after you've finished some embroidery and just soapsuds won't take it out, try a weak solution of bleach. Then wash it promptly in rich soapsuds and rinse quickly and thoroughly.
