ALONG NATURE'S TRAIL

by KEN McLEOD

We left John Muir and party camped at the top of Guillem's Bluff overlooking Tulelake and the Modoc Lava Beds in yesterday's column, the date was November 14, 1874. John has left for us one of the most delightfully descriptive passages of the beauty of the scene from a vantage point so few people have ever taken the time or effort to visit.

"The next day we returned to Van's ranch," writes John, "but Sisson, who thus far had been occupied mostly about camp, set out alone for what he called a square day's hunting all by himself, declaring he would kill a ram before night. From Rhet Lake, where we had camped, he struck directly across the lava plains for the main sheep mountain, while Jerome drove around with the wagon. Van, Bremer, Brown, Heppburn and myself rode over the sage plains, leaving the mountain on the left, hoping to find our game on the way; nor were we disappointed.

"While we were riding single file in silence through the rough lava and sage plain, Van's keen eyes discovered a flock of fifty or more rams, ewes, and a few lambs. I was gazing at Mount Bremer, and the first intimation I had was Van's dismounting and handing me his halber. The noble game was about three hundred yards distant and stood gazing at us. To the right was a jagged battlement of lava, to the left their grand mountain stronghold, and they evidently were undecided as to which they should reach. The latter was safer, but it was further off. They turned this way and that, evidently frightened, feeling caught on account of the levelness of the plain in which they stood. Meanwhile, Van and Heppburn ran towards them crouching in the sage, and taking advantage of a slight swell in the ground. Hunter Brown, who was always getting unsteady of things, had taken his rifle apart, locked it into his pine box, and sent it back to Van's in the wagon.

"As soon as the hunters' heads began to appear above the swell, the watchful game saw the absolute need of moving somewhere, and an old ram led off towards the mountain, all the others following slowly in single file, about fifty in the block, and as they bounded on at right angles it formed a very exciting scene. The hunters were now about two hundred and fifty yards from them, and just as they got under full headway they drew up and took deliberate aim. Van, as he sighted his heavy Colt rifle, looked exactly like the figures one sees on powder-flasks, while the tall, manly form of Heppburn, slanting back and taking aim, resembled the mast of a clipper ship. They fired, and Heppburn's ram fell, a noble old fellow, broad and ponderous as a buffalo. Then bang went his other barrel, and his second sheep, a ewe, fell so suddenly that in the excitement she was not observed. Judge the feelings of poor gunless Brown, witnessing the fray, outwardly cool as icy Shasta, yet doubtless, like that old volcano, hot within.

"The brave sheep were now bounding wildly over the gray plain in a direct line for their castle mountain, and a bright thought flashed into the brain of Brown: he would head off the flying game and drive it back to be shot. So he gathered up his reins, and, as if he were riding steepchase, dashed his spurs heels into his horse's flank. But the lazy mustang had no enthusiasm and made but a feeble response to Brown's ardor, so after galloping madly through the sage at the rate of about ten miles an hour, Brown drove rein in despair. Meanwhile, Heppburn's ram arose, and after staggering a few rods, while the hunters were reloading, ran firm and erect again with his huge horns thrown back over his shoulders. A second shot missed him, and he fled like the wind to the shelter of the lava cliffs, the bullet probably having grazed his skull without inflicting any permanent injury. It was a fine specimen of a full-grown ram, broad and massive and probably weighing three hundred and fifty pounds. Just before he went down back of the cliff, he halted. There his form and noble horns were clearly outlined against the sky.

"We little know how much wildness there is in us. Only a few generations separate us from our grandfathers that were savage as

Mental Disturbances Of The Alcoholic Described

(Editor's Note — This is the twelfth in a series of articles dealing with the disease of alcoholism and what Alcoholics Anonymous is doing to combat it.)

By LYLE DOWNING
An Associated Press dispatch to the Herald and News from New York Saturday quoted Dr. Seldon D. Bacon, director of the Yale Center for Alcohol Studies, as saying: "I don't believe that alcoholism is ever going to be cured by a pill or a law."

Dr. Bacon made this statement in connection with the Alcohol Foundation's findings in a search for a hangover remedy.

The alcoholic researcher also verified recent estimates of the number of persons in the United States suffering from the disease of alcoholism as 4,000,000 of the nation's 65,000,000 drinkers. Alcoholics Anonymous has reclaimed more than 150,000 victims of the disease.

It is very interesting to learn that the Yale Center is concerning itself with the hangover. However, thousands of victims of alcoholism would be more interested if the researchers were trying to find a cure for the nameless fears and aberrations that affect persons in the acute stage of the disease.

MENTAL DISTURBANCES
An alcoholic who is about to hit bottom could go through a dozen hangovers such as the social drinker experiences standing on his head. Victims of alcoholism suffer mental disturbances that make the conventional hangover seem nothing worse than a slight headache.

A great many members of Alcoholics Anonymous, since their recovery, have described some of these mental aberrations. Before they beat the alcoholic rap, 24 psychiatrists with an equal number of couches couldn't have dragged the information out of them. But when freed from the alcoholic shackles they were willing to reveal details concerning mental disturbances which they had previously kept a dark secret. They reasonably kept a dark secret, might be alleviated if they knew their alcoholic nightmares were not unique.

Twice before in this series we have referred to the case history of Joe E. an alcoholic newspaperman, who joined AA and made a success of it after a seige of delirium tremens. Let's review what he has to say about mental disturbances caused by alcohol.

NIGHTS OF TERROR
Before he was finally stricken by a full-fledged attack of the DTs, Joe E. spent many nights of terror alone in his hotel room. He had two obsessions which he labeled the "FBI Horrors" and the "Big Magnet."

After he reached a certain stage of intoxication, Joe E. would be mentally projected into some sensational crime case as the central figure. The illusion would become as realistic as if he was watching it on a movie screen. Joe E. would go through all the terror of being pursued by relentless FBI agents, captured and hanged or sent to the electric chair. Restless sleep would follow.

The "Big Magnet" was just as terrifying to Joe E. as the "FBI Horrors." He would often wake up in the night and see a magnet hundred times bigger than the ones he used to pick up pins when he was a child. The magnet would be in the window of his room and its forks would be pointed toward him. Joe E. would have a get a virtual death grip on his bedstead to keep from being drawn out the window. Just when it seemed he couldn't hold on any longer, the magnet would disappear.

Many a night Joe E. says he was in a hotel lobby to escape the "Big Magnet" and because of it he never sleep in a room higher than one story from the street.

Hundreds of other members of AA can tell just as fantastic stories of mental aberrations. Fortunately, the social or conventional drinker has nothing more serious to worry about than a hangover. (Next-More AA experiences)

Train Plunges Over Trestle

STELLACOOM, Wash. (AP) — In what the engineer called "30 seconds of hell," eight units of a 73-car Union Pacific Railroad freight train plunged through a burning trestle into Puget Sound here yesterday.

The only casualty was L. R. Pearson, a brakeman who suffered minor burns about the eyes as he braved flames to save three carloads of bellowing cattle.

Union Pacific officials placed damage to the trestle and to the cars at more than $200,000.

Engineer William Boyce said he was highballing along the water-side track toward Seattle, some 45 miles to the north, when he rounded a curve and saw flames billowing from the trestle.

He applied the air brakes, but the heavily laden train couldn't be stopped before the three diesel units and 19 cars ploughed through the flames. The next eight cars dropped through to the water as the trestle gave away. Four cars burned.

The destroyed cars carried wax, tires, refrigerators and shoes. The cause of the fire was not determined.
