CAUGHT IN THE ROUNDS

By DEB ADDISON
RETAIL MEMO:
Another barometer of the business climate showed signs of rising last month (April) as industrial production matched seasonal expectations for the first time since July, 1953.

It marked the end of a series of eight consecutive monthly dips in the Federal Reserve Board's seasonally adjusted industrial production index, according to the Journal of Commerce.

FRB estimated that the April output rate continued into early May. Largest decline in the adjusted index over the year has been in the production of durable goods, dropping 20 points from 155 in April 1953. Production of soft goods went down only eight points from 121 to 113. Output of most building materials continued close to last year's high levels.

Chances are "better than ever" that the economic downturn — in progress since mid-1953 — has touched bottom and the economy is headed upward again, according to Harvard Economist S. H. Slichter in the NY Times.

Unlike previous recessions capital expenditures for plant and equipment, spending for research and spending by the public for construction have not fallen off severely.

Effects of the recession, he added, have been mainly limited to production of durable goods and coal. Slichter also stressed that spending for services on the rise, personal income is a strong, steady, retail sales figures for April indicate no decline or only a negligible one, and spending by states and municipalities is rising.

Actually, it appears that spending for "everything going into housing" will continue to rise.

ALONG NATURE'S TRAIL

by KEN McLEOD

As the events leading to the start of the Modoc War were building up to a climax it is indeed interesting to see how so many individuals were caught in the web of fate from which there was no retreat. Politics had set the stage to "get-tough" with this band of Indians who declined to comply with the orders which the federal authorities had given. At the conference of Juniper Springs on May 4, 1872, the series of events reached their climax and it became obvious there was but one course to be taken.

Up to this point we find the history of the Modoc War to be a series of easily understood events, and so far we have not found anything that would cloud the story. The next act in our drama, however, is decidedly confusing and filled with charges and counter charges and just plain distortion of fact until one does not know what to accept as being true.

Some phases of the story are agreed upon by all, while others are thrown into such a state of confusion it will take a lot of research to develop a proper background. Particularly is this true of the motives behind the whole affair; this is clearly evident when we consider that here was a band of Indians openly defying the orders of federal authorities and the authorities in turn treating them with a degree of consideration never before accorded other recalcitrant Indian groups under such circumstances.

It is quite apparent that powerful political pressures were at work which the federal authorities could not disregard. As one reads narrative after narrative he is struck with the similarity of theme; the writers wrote in justification of their acts, everybody else was out of step, thus we find much recrimination by imputation as well as by direct charge.

Mac-Army Still Raise Big Ruckus

WASHINGTON (AP)—Here is a brief rundown on the Senate Investigations subcommittee's inquiry into the dispute between Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis) and top Army officials.

The original charges—Secretary of the Army Stevens and Army Counselor John G. Adams accused McCarthy and two subcommittee aides, Roy M. Cohn and Francis P. Carr, of using improper pressures to win favored Army treatment for Pvt. G. David Schine, a subcommittee aide who was drafted.

McCarthy and his associates in turn accused Stevens and Adams of attempting to use Schine as a "hostage" in efforts to induce McCarthy to halt or divert an investigation of alleged subversives in the Army, particularly at Ft. Monmouth, N.J. They also accused Asst. Secretary of Defense H. Bruce Hensel of seeking to discredit the subcommittee.

The subcommittee voted 4-1 on May 26 to dismiss Carr and Hensel as principals.

Pertinent past testimony — Stevens denied trying to nail McCarthy's probe, but testified he did object to methods he said gave a distorted picture. He said McCarthy's aides subjected him to threats of an "exceedingly serious" nature in seeking Army favors for Schine.

Adams testified Cohn threatened that if Schine were sent overseas, Stevens would be "through as secretary" and the Army wrecked. Adams said "The pressure (from Cohn) became extremely hard to bear."

Cohn said Stevens and Adams repeatedly sought to stop the Ft. Monmouth investigation. He said Adams referred to Schine as "the hostage" more often than he used Schine's name, and that Adams once said he would "stop at nothing" to block a subcommittee move to question members of the Army's top loyalty board. Cohn denied Army testimony that he had once "declared war" on the Army when barred from a secret radar laboratory at Ft. Monmouth.

HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) — What can the poor working girl do to protect herself against "the overfriendly boss?"

"When my boss puts his arm on my shoulder, it's anything but love," remarked a stenographer. "He only does it after one of those four-marlin, three-hour business luncheons, and he just wants something to lean on until he can reach his swivel chair. What the girl really needs some days, though, is artificial respiration."

"Heavens, I wish my boss or anybody else — would put his arm around me," said a secretary. "After 25 years behind the same old hot typewriter, I've forgotten what it feels like."

"I wish my boss would thaw out more," admitted another stenographer. "After all if he were trying to put his arm around me, he'd shut up about what a lousy spell'er I am."

The girls went into a huddle when I asked them what was the best way to curb an employer who really did insist on getting over-overfriendly on company time.

"Every time he reaches for you," suggested one, "just ask him for a raise. Boy, his arm will flop down as if you'd hit it with a crowbar."

"Well, in the old days I guess a working girl always kept a hatpin handy," said a second. "If my boss bothered me, you know what I'd do? I'd sew half a dozen thumbtacks in the waist and shoulders of my dress — with the points sticking out. Imagine how he'd look after he pawed over three sharp thumbtacks!"

The other girls laughed merrily at the mental picture of the boss winning his office purple heart the hard way. But they all agreed the cynical, middle-aged spinster secretary had an even better answer.

"The best way for a girl to cure an overfriendly boss is to marry him," she said, acidly. "That seems to cool any man down."

THE DOCTOR SAYS

By EDWIN P. JORDAN, M.D.
What troubles we mortals do have. Mrs. B. asks for advice about a friend who "suffers from every phobia one can think of."

She goes on to say that the friend had an appointment with an eye specialist, but by the time she had her eyes tested she had become so neurotic she thought she was going blind, when all she needed was glasses for reading.

This sort of thing, of course, is a nightmare to the person suffering from the phobia and a disconcerting and trying experience for family and friends. In discussing it, it should be said first that a phobia is an abnormal fear.

It is not the kind of fear which all of us have in the face of a real risk. It is an excessive fear of something which is either imaginary or of which a normal person will shrug off with little worry.

In severe cases of phobia or obsession it may be a symptom of real mental disease. Under such circumstances, of course, a psychiatrist should be consulted.

There are many kinds of fears and I shall mention only a few of them because someone might think of a new phobia for the first time. One fear is called acrophobia, which is fear of great heights.

This seems to be quite common, probably so much so that it is almost "normal." There is another fear called bathophobia, which really means fear of great depths. If it really meant the way it is sounded it would be common enough among children.

There are other phobias with long and astonishing names and even stranger meanings. At the risk of making this sound like a

Quick Thinking Prevents Leap

SCRANTON, Pa. (AP)—Quick thinking and a dash of elementary psychology by a Scranton police officer was instrumental in averting what might have been a leap from a mid-city rooftop yesterday.

While a hastily summoned squad of police raced to the fourth floor roof of the Prezioso Building, Mrs. Mayme Orr, 50, climbed the parapet and stood poised atop the cornice.

Down in the street, Sgt. Earl Kugler, who knew the woman, sensed the situation and called out in a gruff voice: "Get back there, Mayme, or I'll call the wagon!"

Startled, the woman retreated from the ledge and the waiting arms of several police officers. Police said the woman gave no explanation for the action.
