Deer Meat Program Told

A new system for handling deer meat received by the Oregon State Game Commission has not only made for better handling of the meat, but also made the work involved less complicated. The program was developed through cooperation between the commission and the Oregon State Board of Control.

The new agreement which is in trial operation at present provides that the meat from western Oregon shall be shipped to Salem and the meat from east of the Cascades to the Oregon State Hospital at Pendleton for state institutional use.

The meat is received from various parts of the state when it is confiscated from violators or salvaged when an animal is hit by a car. Formerly, the meat was all shipped to the Portland office of the commission where it was then sold or disposed of, depending on the condition in which it arrived.

The state board of control reimburses the state game fund at the rate of 10 cents per pound and also bears the expense of shipping and cold storage involved. This agreement is to be tried for a 6-month period after which time the state board of control and game commission will re-examine the plan and either adopt it or decide upon other action.
