Mexicans Huddle In Hills Above Flooding Rio Grande

PIEDRAS NEGRAS, Mexico.—This was a town of sorrow and uncounted dead last night. The greatest flood in the history of the Rio Grande rolled down on Piedras Negras and past the levee that curled around it like a protective arm. Thirty-eight persons are known dead. But few believed last night these were all the dead. Unconfirmed estimates ranged up to 500. Last night campfires flickered on the rough, mesquite-covered hills around what was a thriving farm town of 35,000 people across the Rio Grande from Eagle Pass, Tex. These were the fires of the homeless, people who daily trudge back to their ruined houses in search of the dead. At least one half—the half farthest from the river — of Piedras Negras still is flooded. The downtown section was in better shape. It is high, on the edge of the Rio Grande, and the water has receded from its white brick, two-story buildings with spires and shutters of red and blue. Cars move through the paved downtown streets and merchants sady take up the job of getting back to ruined businesses. Away from the business section, the paving plays out and the streets are loblollies of sticky mud down which no automobile can travel. These are the sections where adobe houses melted like toy mud huts made by children. Open cesspools-pock the town like sores. There is no pure water in the town. H. G. Walker, a U.S. Public Health Service officer from Eagle Pass who has inspected Piedras Negras, said, "Sanitary conditions are horrible. The water system was never adequate and now there is none at all." At first Walker said, bodies were pulled out of mesquite bushes and buried quickly. "But listen," he said, "there are five or six kids in every Mexican family. These families take care of their own. They find a drowned kid and they bury him pronto."

big flood in 1932 and they put their faith in it. "And it failed them."

Decline In Farm Prices Reported

WASHINGTON (AP)—Prices farmers received for their products dropped 4 per cent between mid-May and mid-June, but the decline was felt largely by commodities not directly involved in the congressional battle over farm price supports. Most of the decline in the farm price index announced yesterday reflected a decrease of about 17 per cent in prices of hogs and an over-all decrease of 10 per cent in prices of all meat animals. Prices of meat animals are not supported by the government.

ROME (AP)—A hundred thousand Communist-led farm workers went back to the untended fields and gaunt-ribbed cattle of Ferrara province Thursday after a two-month strike that cost an estimated three million dollars. The strikers got raises equal to three cents an hour.
