First Nat'l 24th Largest U.S. Bank

The statewide First National Bank of Portland, with 67 banking offices in 55 Oregon communities, is now the 24th largest bank in the nation on the basis of deposits reported at the time of the June 30 bank call.

First National's new high ranking was revealed by the American Banker, New York daily banking publication, which compiled the list of the nation's biggest banks, ranked according to June 30 deposits. The publication described the move as "First National's sensational ten-place gain."

This 24th place standing among the largest banks in the country represents a climb of ten places from 34th position a year ago and reflects the acquisition by First National of its 15 affiliated banks last February.

"The Portland bank is now among the nation's top 25 banks and in its all-time high position," it pointed out.

First National's deposits of $702,191,711 on June 30 also gave the Portland bank the top position among banks in the Pacific Northwest.

Youth Group To Visit KF

Thirty-two boys, five leaders and counselors from Boys Town of the West at White Salmon Washington, will arrive in Klamath Falls Saturday and will put on a program for the Eagles lodge that night.

Boys Town of the West was given a boost in 1951 when Washington State Aerie of Eagles adopted a resolution to play "big brother" to the boys at the camp and since that time it has been aided by many Eagles lodges throughout Washington and Oregon. Of the 52 boys who will appear here, 19 are from Oregon.

On tour with the boys will be their counselors, Mr. and Mrs. P. H. (Major) Blake, who are also founders of the camp.

In an article appearing recently in the Eagles Auxiliary magazine, Mrs. Eagle, relates how Major Blake, while living at The Dairies, conceived the idea of starting the boys town and after considerable campaigning businessmen at White Salmon purchased an old farmhouse and 80 acres of land ten miles north of that city.

This farm is now the site for Boys Town of the West. The trip here is being assisted financially by the local Eagles lodge and members who can furnish accommodations for the boys.

KASRU Fly-In Filmed In Color

A 16mm film in color was completed Sunday by Clarence Ward at the Klamath Air Search and Rescue Unit's fly-in to the Chiloquin air strip.

A good representation from KASRU went to Chiloquin, according to Harris Brown, flight commander, who added that four Klamath small planes participated in the mock search which was recorded in film. The picture shows the coordinated work of air and ground crews in searching for a missing person, stressing the close cooperation by means of radio between the searching groups, as well as aid to injured or persons ill from exposure that is provided by the service.

When processed, the film will be available without charge, for showing by organizations and clubs throughout the state. The air strip at Chiloquin has been reconed by Ted and Fritz Markwardt, Brown stated, and is in excellent shape.
