Actor Says Job Hunting Hard Job

By HUBBARD KEAVY (For Bob Thomas)
HOLLYWOOD (AP) — At last I've heard an actor admit that waiting for a job is a frustrating, nerve-racking, baffling experience. Before the big break came, most of them will tell you with a newborn confidence it was just a matter of calmly waiting.

The man with the candid approach is Alvy Moore and he has, in "Susan Slaps Here," his first big role. It is a comedy part, as Dick Powell's ex-Navy sidekick, and already it is making Moore important.

Alvy has been around Hollywood for years trying to break in. He'd get an occasional bit and an infrequent TV show, but it was difficult to make ends meet. He had an agent, but the studios always said, "Yeah, but what's he ever done?"

Small parts, the agent would say, but he's a comer. He's a different sort of comedian, has a unique delivery and a great comedy forte. Why he's not a star, but that the pitch would be ended and still Alvy didn't have a job.

The fact that he had played Lt. Pulver in "Mr. Roberts" for 14 months didn't impress anyone. When he was called to read for "Susan," he went with the usual high hope and the single thought, "This is it." But the butterflies in his stomach didn't stop fluttering until the producer said, "You're hired."

Says Alvy: "I can't describe how terrible it is to be an actor and to be out of work. You wake up in the morning and say, 'I can't get out of bed — what will I do today?' There is nothing to do but wait for the phone to ring. In New York an actor can look for work. But in Hollywood it isn't done because it is unprofessional. Besides, producers won't even let actors in to their offices without appointments — unless the actor drives a Cadillac."

"Funny thing, the actor who drives a Cadillac is considered a better actor than one who drives, say, a beat-up '47 Plymouth. Even the gatekeepers wouldn't let me drive into the studio parking lots. The guy with the big car must be a better actor, everyone in Hollywood thinks, because he gets more money. It is a phony place, all right. When you're nobody, people look right through you."

Mr. and Mrs. Esgate came to Klamath Falls in 1929 and have made their home at their present address since then. Mr. Esgate, a farmer and carpenter is now retired. — By Fred Heard

Director Plans Intricate Scene For Esther Williams

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Here is a swimming pool with a capacity of 600,000 gals., the most attractive of which is Esther Williams. It takes some doing to figure out new ways to display Esther in the water, but Hermes Pan is our man. This classically christened dance director went into mythology, because the story is about Hannibal and Rome, to dream up a number for Esther. In the pool are statues of Apollo and several other fellows who could have been kinsmen of Hermes. Esther glides into the pool and Apollo — in the person of Johnny Oizewski, he of the Chicago Cardinals — comes to life when Esther kisses him. This is fantasy?

Seixas Plans To Consider Tennis Future

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Vic Seixas, the nation's No. 2 amateur, says that after the national championships next month he plans to sit down and "consider how much longer I'm going to play tennis."

On the screen the entire sequence will last but seven minutes. But it involves 15 players and technicians, five weeks of rehearsal and five full days of filming. Heretofore, Esther's underwater life has been filmed through a window in the side of a big tank. That got to be pretty stale, stuff because about all Esther could do was cut her capers in front of the camera. The limitations were pretty narrow. In this one, called "Jupiter's Darling," the cameras will be in the water too, which will give Esther and companions much more latitude. Part of the rehearsal time was spent determining how long Esther and the six males representing the ancient deities could stay under water. The limit was 50 seconds. Hermes had to break up the action into 50-second takes. This meant something had to be done about the music, because you just can't play music willy-nilly and hope it fits. Eight bars run 50 seconds. So everything had to be coordinated to the second. It would seem that after Hermes got this thing all set up and timed and rehearsed it could be knocked off in eight 50-second takes. But movies can't be made so easily. There will be long delays while the swimmers rest, while lights are focused and cameras moved. And each tiny part of the scene will be filmed many times from varying angles. If you see this picture you are apt to wonder how Esther's red hair stays in place under water. Simple. She douses her head with transparent grease and her braids are wired into place, she explains. "So I can't come undone, can I?"

Famed Gunman Dies In Prison

COTTONDALE, Tex. (AP) — Machine Gun Kelly, followed in the news by millions when he was, for a brief period, America's most notorious desperado, still drew 3,300 people to death.

On one of the ribbons was written "Hubbard."
 Kelly was sent to prison for the $200,000 kidnaping of oil man Charles F. Urschel, then of Oklahoma City, now of San Antonio, Tex. Urschel was held on Shannon's farm. Kelly got life, as did Kathryn and Mrs. Shannon. Boss got 11 years.

They buried Kelly yesterday in the Cottondale cemetery.
 Only one relative was present. It was Boss Shannon, who still calls Kelly "George." Shannon is his father-in-law. He loaned Kelly his farm home for Kelly's most famous crime, went to prison with him, finally reserved Kelly a spot of ground in the cemetery.
 Like a lot of others, Boss Shannon filed past the casket for a last look.
 When he saw Kelly's face, he broke into a smile.
 "Well, George," he said, "you sure look nice."
 A little girl fainted during the ceremony.
 Flamboyant Kathryn Kelly, Machine Gun's wife and partner in crime — couldn't come. She and her mother, Boss' Shannon's wife, still are in prison.
 But she sent flowers — red roses.
