Telephones now go with you on trips. When anybody asks in the Pacific West today, "Where's the nearest telephone?" you can be pretty sure there's one not far away. And nowadays, some of the telephones that serve you actually travel with you. For instance, you can even find them on trains—like the Southern Pacific's Lark, above—and aboard passenger ships. Many private boats, automobiles and even airplanes also have telephones. We call this service "mobile service." With it, you can reach almost anyone, anywhere, quickly and at low cost. Surely one of the things that makes the telephone so valuable is that there are so many of them, in so many different places. That's because we're constantly tailoring our service to fit the needs of the people who use it.

On the road—in ambulances and truck fleets, for example—telephones-on-wheels save valuable time, help get things done.

At sea, ship telephone service provides weather reports for navigation, has many other uses for business and pleasure.

At home, or in business, your telephone is more valuable because of the progress we've made with mobile service. You can call more people in more places—and they can call you.

Pacific Telephone works to make your telephone a bigger value every day
