

Film On Edwin Booth Shows Death Of Abraham Lincoln

By BOB THOMAS
 HOLLYWOOD (AP)—They were shooting Abe Lincoln again, and I went out to watch it.
 The assassination was taking place on a 20th-Fox stage for "Prince of Players," the biography of Edwin Booth, Philip Dunne, a studios type who is directing his first picture, told me the set was an exact replica of Ford's Theater. "So darned exact," he complained, "I have trouble getting my camera into it."

President Lincoln was being played by a London-born dancer named Stanley Hall. This fellow can boast the most contrasting assignments of the year. His last job was with the Jack Cole dancers in a Marilyn Monroe number for "There's No Business Like Show Business." That's how makeup head Ben Nye happened to see him and admire his Lincoln-like facial structure.

All Hall had to do was sit in the box and get shot. But John Wilkes Booth had to do the dastardly deed and then leap 15 feet to the stage. Booth is played by John Derek, a foolhardy lad who wanted to make the jump himself.

Director Dunne decided he wanted no actor with a broken leg. The fellow made the leap, landing in a nest of rubber cushions below the level of the stage. Then Derek jumped, but only to another platform a few feet below the president.

I asked Derek if he didn't feel quills about playing one of the arch villains of American history. "Not at all," he replied jauntily. "They gotta hate me before they love me..."

Over the "Untamed" set Susan Hayward was acting out a tense scene with Richard Egan for this South African film of life below the veldt. The red head sighed wearily. Almost every day since last May, she has been before the camera.

She swore off all film making until 1955. "What a joy it would be not to be working at Christmas for once in my life," she said.

Still she is enthused about her next project—a loanout to MGM for "I'll Cry Tomorrow." That's the saga of Lillian Roth, who went from stardom to alcoholism and back again. Susan got a preview of her assignment by watching Miss Roth re-live her story on Ralph Edwards' "This Is Your Life."

"By the time it was over, I was bawling like a baby," Susan confessed. This is her second job as a real-life songstress, the first being the Jane Froman story.

And so to U-I, where they have cracked up a plane for "The Looters." The story concerns some air crash victims and their rescuers, who struggle over $250,000 discovered in the plane. One of them, Ray Danton, starts killing off the others one by one.

I met Danton, and he ruined my whole day. I think this Danton will make it. Stardom, I mean. A New York boy, he is darkly handsome and has a deep voice that should set the girls a-tingle. Besides, he has played a deep-deeped heavy in his first two pictures. As Derek said, there's nothing better for an actor to get ahead.

Here's how my day was ruined. As I left, Danton, who claims he is 23, remarked: "I'm glad to have met you, sir."

Sir! Me, the one they used to call boy reporter. It was an awful blow.

Neuberger Denies Cheating Charge Levelled By Judge

PORTLAND (AP)—Richard L. Neuberger has denied he was expelled from the University of Oregon Law School for cheating and Sen. Wayne Morse has backed him up.

The charge against Neuberger, the Democratic nominee for U.S. senator, was made last week by Circuit Judge Carl E. Wimberly, Roseburg, a former law partner of Sen. Guy Cordon, Neuberger's Republican opponent.

Neuberger gave this version of the 20-year-old episode.

"He said he used citations prepared by another student for a legal bibliography. He said he did not know that the assignment was to be handled individually instead of by groups as he had been away from the school a few days.

The accusation of violation of the honor system was referred to a five-man board of law school faculty members. The group voted 4-1 to expel Neuberger from the law school, with Morse who was dean of the law school, voting against expulsion.

The matter then was referred to the University's discipline committee, which exonerated Neuberger.

Neuberger said he left the law school to enter the journalism department because of scholastic difficulties.

Neuberger produced a letter which he said Morse had written in 1930, giving substantially the same version. Morse, who is supporting Neuberger in the current campaign, wrote the letter before he bolted the Republican Party to become an independent.

The letter said in part: "It is not true that Mr. Neuberger was kicked out of the University of Oregon law school. He studied law for a term and decided that he did not care to continue with the study of law because of his preference and greater liking for journalism."

Meantime at Roseburg, Wimberly said: "Insofar as Neuberger is concerned, the significant fact is that he was charged with violating the honor system and that he was shortly thereafter eliminated from the law school. He may have been whitewashed by the trial committee but his connection with the law school was severed nevertheless."

Cordon said he regretted that Wimberly had made the charge. "But Neuberger said, 'I do not place any credence in Sen. Cordon's unctuous denial. Two professional lobbyists have been traveling the state in the interests of the Cordon campaign, circulating the tale far and wide.'"

On Sunday, Charles Porter of Roseburg, the Democratic nominee to the U. S. House of Representatives from the Fourth Oregon Congressional District, said Wimberly's statement was a violation of article 28 of the Canon of Judicial Ethics of the American Bar Assn.
 Porter said that Wimberly's statement regarding Neuberger amounted to partisan activity and he called upon Wimberly to retire from partisan politics.

This article directs that a judge should not act as a party leader nor engage in partisan activity, nor engage in partisan activity, nor engage in partisan activity.
