US Delegate Rejects Red's Atomic Pool Plan Changes

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The United States says the Soviets will have to trim their demands for changes if they want to participate in President Eisenhower's peaceful atom pool plan.
Russian objections to the proposed pool were presented to the U.N. last night by Soviet Delegate Andrei Y. Vishinsky. He said Moscow would like to take part on conditions the West so far refused to accept.
Chief U.S. Delegate Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. describes Vishinsky's speech before the Assembly's main Political Committee as "a magnificent display of forensic fireworks but very little substance to them."
Lodge said he would make a detailed reply early next week.
Vishinsky charged the United States and its atomic partners reduced the original Eisenhower proposal to a mere shell by:
1. Trying to set up an international atomic agency independent of the Security Council. The Soviets want the body subject to the council, in which they have a veto.
2. Attempting to make the agency a clearing house for moving fissionable materials from one land to another. The Russian delegate branded this an infringement of national sovereignty.
3. Sponsoring a resolution which makes no provision for a prior pledge among the nations concerned not to use nuclear weapons in the future. Vishinsky added, however, that the Kremlin would make such a pledge a condition for joining the agency.

4. Failure to reflect the intent of the Eisenhower proposal by not considering methods for preventing use of atomic materials for warlike purposes.
In his reply, Lodge said the United States has no objection to the atomic agency keeping liaison with the Security Council—provided the project does not get "bogged down in veto."
Commenting on Vishinsky's call for a ban on atomic weapons, Lodge said the question was up to the Disarmament Commission and had no place in the Eisenhower program.
Western diplomats viewed Vishinsky's speech as a strategic attempt to assess the West's flexibility on the atomic question.
