Thornton's Advice Isn't Asked By State Officials

By PAUL W. HARVEY JR.
SALEM (AP) — Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton, the only Oregon state official who's a Democrat, isn't having to work as hard as former attorneys general.

Fort Rock Receives REA Funds

FORT ROCK — George Larimer, manager of the Mid-State Electric Co-op, Lapine, received word last week that $750,000 had just been released by the REA for the construction of a line for the Fort Rock, Silver Lake and Christmas Lake areas in Lake County. Construction of transmission lines will be started immediately by the Mid-State Electric Co-op. The telegram was sent by Fred Hamlin, head of the operations section, western area office, REA, Washington, D.C.

Forty three miles of 60 KVA transmission line from Lapine to Fort Rock and 198 miles of distribution line to serve 327 consumers including 183 irrigation pumps, will be constructed.
Mid-State Electric receives its energy direct from a connection with Bonneville sub-station at Redmond. The sub-station also distributes power to the Central Electric Co-op, Redmond, and to the Pacific Power and Light Company.
The coming of electric power into the Fort Rock, Silver Lake and Christmas Lake areas means a great deal to the economy of these desert communities. Not only will the standard of domestic living rise with the convenience of electricity but the economic status of the communities will rise with the use of electric power. Eighty-four pumps are scheduled for installation the first year.

Also benefiting from the electric power will be the Silver Lake Sawmill, the Deadwood Sawmill, Silver Lake and the D. L. McCree Sawmill, Fort Rock.
This announcement coincided with open house and a tour of the new offices of the Mid-State Electric Co-op of Lapine. The offices and maintenance building are large and of modern design.
George Larimer, manager, and Mrs. Larimer received approximately 200 guests and visitors Saturday afternoon. Assisting them were Mr. and Mrs. Darrel Ferns, Mr. and Mrs. Glen Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Art Vance, Mr. and Mrs. Dale Swancutt, Mrs. Russel Keat and June James.

That's because the Republican officials don't like his advice.
Thornton has been in office two years, and he has issued some opinions that haven't been appreciated by the Republicans who asked for them. Now, they just don't ask him what he thinks, although he's the legal adviser to all state officers.
In the before-Thornton era, the state officials used to elude the attorney general's office with requests for opinions and advice. For one thing, that was a convenient way for a state official to get off the hook.
Thornton isn't averaging one opinion a week. Even this tiny output is supplied for persons other than state officials. Most of the requests for opinions come from members of the Legislature and district attorneys.

Gov. Paul L. Patterson, Secretary of State Earl T. Newberry and State Treasurer Sig Unander, Republicans all, are now getting their legal advice from other lawyers.
The conflict broke into the open last weekend, when Thornton refused to pay for the governor's investigation of the Liquor Commission. Thornton says his office is charged by law with conducting such investigations, and that the governor shouldn't have gone to a private lawyer to get his sleuthing accomplished.
Thornton's most unpopular opinions, so far as the Republican officials are concerned, "can be narrowed down to three."
First, he advised the Board of Control that it couldn't pay for a site out of the $1,250,000 appropriation for a new reformatory.
The board, consisting of Patterson, Newberry and Unander, was tempted to ignore Thornton's advice. But it didn't, because an attorney general's opinions seem to have all the sanctity of a court decision.
So the board got the money for the site from the State Emergency Board, causing a long delay in choosing the site.
Then the board asked Thornton if it's legal for the prison convicts to pick crops on private farms, with the prison splitting the crops with the owners. This had been done for many years, and it was hard to figure why the board even asked for the opinion.

Thornton ruled the practice was illegal, and that ended it. The result was that the penitentiary lost a good source of cheap food.
When Thornton ruled that the State Board of Conciliation had jurisdiction in last summer's lumber strike, Gov. Patterson didn't like it, because the governor disagreed.
The Lincoln County vice investigation also found the governor and Thornton on opposite sides of the fence.
Last summer, when Howard Morgan, Democratic state chairman, charged that some Republican candidates didn't report all they spent in the primary election campaign, Secretary of State Newberry needed lots of legal advice in order to handle Morgan's charges.
Newberry didn't get it from Thornton, though. He didn't even ask Thornton for an opinion, believing Thornton might side with Morgan.

Naturally, Patterson, Newberry and Unander think that Thornton lets politics influence his opinions.
Thornton denies this. He points out that his opinions are prepared by his top deputies, who are Republicans. This latter fact has put Thornton into hot water with the Democratic Party leaders, who'd like to see the deputies replaced with Democrats.

Thornton now plans to conduct his own liquor investigation, which will do more to widen the breach.
The Republicans would like to have a Republican attorney general. There are rumblings that the Legislature, which meets here next month, will consider legislation to let the governor appoint the attorney general. The office now is elective by the people.
Thornton does have one cause for which he can be thankful. Next month, Oregon gets a Democratic labor commissioner, Norman O. Nilsen. He's the first Democrat ever to hold that office.
We'll bet that Nilsen is one official who'll ask Thornton's advice.

Cover Crops Recommended

PORTLAND (AP) — Big crops can be grown in time of emergency if more cover crops are planted now, Ray Teal, Oregon State College seed marketing specialist, said here Wednesday.
He urged the Oregon Seed Growers League to urge the government to encourage farmers to plant more grass, legumes and cover crops to build up soil fertility for years to come.
Delegates at the opening day of the league's annual meeting also heard W. H. Youngman, federal Department of Agriculture economist, tell of European need for high quality seed.
Youngman said Europe probably never could produce enough seed for its own need. He added that northern Europe stood a better chance of doing that, however, than southern Europe.
The league president Jay A. Macy, Madras, advised the league to improve its financing. He said voluntary contributions are not adequate.
